What's in a Name?

We'll tell you. We have picked out the name Apelpi for our Evaporated Apples, so that every time it is thought of particular people will think of the finest fruit of this kind ever put on the market.

We have adopted the sentence, "The bottom as good as the top," because that is unusual with evaporated apples, and we pride ourselves on the fact that it applies to ours. Put them in, and your troubles in this direction are over.

How to Make Other Cocoas as Good as Ours

Take the average cocoa on the market and carry it through another process or two, and you may have an article about as good as Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa.

The trouble is that other manufacturers will not use that "other process or two," because of its cost. They prefer to send out their product half made, as it were—containing indigestible and ill-tasting ingredients which should have been eliminated—so that they can save a little on the cost of making.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa has everything taken out that should be taken out, and for that reason, among others, it has the smoothest, finest flavor of any cocoa made.

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

Who Would Boom His Bulk-Sugar Trade?

You can't imagine yourself doing anything to boom your bulk-sugar trade. No need to discuss the reason, we all know it.

But it would be perfectly good business to take some pains to push Franklin Carton Sugar, since every package pays you to sell it. Not as much profit as tea, but still a far better and more certain profit than sugar has ever paid before, and as good a profit as many things pay of which you sell less.

Possibly even as much profit as tea when you calculate their relative sales.

Give this five minutes' consideration, and you'll say we're right.

Clean, sanitary cartons that preserve strength and freshness. Two-pound cartons and 2, 5, 10, 25, 50 and 100-pound cotton bags : : :

It Is Spelled R=A=M=L=Y

If you want to sell a really delightful smoke, get the real Ramly, don't take something gotten up to look like the Ramly, because there the similarity ends.

No cigarette ever made has jumped into such immediate popularity. It has become famous on its quality alone.

If you put Ramly Cigarettes in stock you will be assured of the permanent patronage of every man to whom you sell a package.

Don't get confused on the name—it is spelled R-A-M-L-Y.

Mentor Cigarette Company

404 Atlantic Avenue

Phila. Rep., ARTHUR HAGAN & Co. 151 North Third Street

BOSTON, MASS.

We Were Surprised

WHEN we first began to import De Rago Olive Oil we never expected it to sell as it has done. We knew we had a splendid, pure, delicious oil, but there were other oils, and we figured on getting simply a share of the business.

But De Rago Olive Oil seemed to go from the first moment it went on sale. All through New England it is the brand of discriminating people. Now we are giving it a chance outside, and it is meeting with the same phenomenal success.

This brand enthusiastically satisfies the most particular people in the United States. Don't you think you might do something with it?

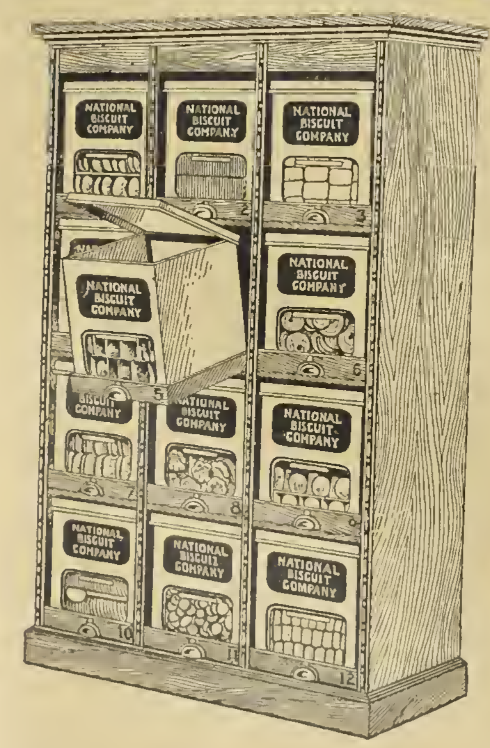
This Cabinet Will Attract Your Customers' Attention



Can you think of a better method of selling cakes than by bringing them to your customers' attention in an attractive manner? You do this best by the use of a Durham Display Cake Cabinet. This cabinet enables you to handle your cakes in a clean, sanitary manner, and it soon pays for itself in preventing the losses you are accustomed to having, such as breakage from constantly moving the cans; sampling, all of you suffer from that; moisture and dust, nothing so hard to sell as a musty, dusty cake.

The cabinet is made of highly-polished oak, in sizes to hold 12, 16, 20 and 24 cans of standard size. The cans rest upon elevated roller trays, easy to slide in and out.

Further particulars and prices on request.

These products represent the very highest grade of their class. Pure, nutritious, delicious foods! More, we bring business in them to your door by our country-wide advertising.

"As Good As I Bought Last Time"

You ought to sell Swift's PREMIUM Hams for your own protection. Can you satisfy your trade unless your hams are uniform? And can they be uniform unless bought from a packer who can keep his raw material uniform?

Few packers have our facilities for keeping hams up to a given standard year after year. Swift's PREMIUM Hams scarcely vary a hair's breadth from one year's end to another. That does us a whole lot of good, as it will do you.

The woman who can always depend on getting good ham—"as good as I bought last time"—is going to buy lots of ham.

WALKER STORE FIXTURES

—Attract Good Trade—

There is so much to be said to the merchant about to buy new fixtures that we prefer to send our catalogue, which will set him wise on many points that he should know. Our designs and our workmanship are unsurpassed. Our customers write that they are more than pleased with the appearance of their stores.

WE KNOW HOW TO DESIGN ARTISTIC INTERIORS

We are ready at all times to offer suggestions covering any detail. And our catalogue is sufficiently explicit to make it both interesting and instructive. Send for it.

Walker Patent Pivoted Bin Co.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

"As Good as the 'J. M.'"

No delivery wagon built is as good as the "J. M.," though many are said to be. The makers of other wagons do the best they can, but they haven't our facilities.

The "J. M." wagon is the handsomest, longest-lived delivery wagon on the market. No other wagon manufacturer we ever knew rejected everything but second-growth hickory for wheels, as we do.

Write for our catalogue.

L & S Pickles

L. & S. Pickles are only one of many brands of sweet pickles on the market—why should you push them instead of the others?

A natural question, and here's the answer:

L. & S. Pickles are preserved with granulated sugar. Many, many brands—it wouldn't be fair to specify—are sweetened with saccharine, a harmful chemical substance made from coal tar! Besides the harmfulness, saccharine only sweetens on the outside anyway; sugar goes clear to the heart of the pickle and preserves it through and through.

That's why you should choose L. & S. Pickles.

Food Manufacturers' Representatives Organize in Their Own Protection.

Locally Form the "Association of Manufacturers' Representatives," which is Intended to Become National in Time. Main Present Object is to Get Better Treatment From Jobbers for Specialty Orders. Will Also Protect Prices.

A rather important new organization has just been born in Philadelphia, which if the intentions of its promoters succeed, will in time become a National factor. The organization is called "the Association of Manufacturers' Representatives," and it is composed of brokers and sales agents who represent specialty manufacturers. Already it has about twenty members, among them being the most important manufacturers' representatives in Philadelphia. The officers are Andrew Ross, Natural Food Co., president; A. M. Warren, Great Western Cereal Co., vice-president; E. W. Murphy, Toasted Corn Flake Co., secretary; Executive Committee, B. R. Kenworthy, N. K. Fairbanks Co.; C. L. Raynor, Walter Lowney & Co.; George A. Dean, P. Duff & Sons. From the character of the firms here represented, it seems evident that the new organization may amount to something.

As set forth in the constitution the objects of the association are "to foster and promote a feeling of fellowship and good will among its members, and to eliminate or minimize abuses, methods and practices inimical to the proper distribution of products represented by its members."

The main object of the organization, at the present time, is to induce more consideration from jobbers in the filling of orders secured from retailers by specialty salesmen and turned into the jobber to be filled. Hundreds of these orders are taken by specialty salesmen every month in all large markets of the country. They are obtained by the manufacturer, who at his own expense sends out salesmen to secure them. In order not to antagonize the jobber, but rather to secure his co-operation, the retailer giving the order is asked what jobber he wishes the goods to go through, and the order is then turned over to that jobber to fill.

During the last few years many jobbers have come to treat these orders very negligently. Some grudgingly agree to fill them, but delay doing it so long that when the goods are finally delivered the retailer turns them down. Others refuse to have anything to do with them, and almost no jobber treats them as the salesman contends they should be treated. For instance, even the most friendly jobbers insist that all orders thus secured shall be confirmed by their own salesmen before being filled. This often means several days' delay until the salesman can get to the retailer's store, and in the meantime the latter has changed his mind.

The manufacturers' agents will endeavor to convince the jobbers that since all of these specialty orders mean a profit to him he should take some interest in them. They say that he should fill them at once, without waiting for the salesman's confirmation, and that if the retailer refuses to accept the goods the jobber should make him.

The jobber's reason for the more or less indifferent way in which he treats the specialty orders is that so many orders of this class have turned out to be worthless that it does not pay him to be bothered with them unless fully confirmed by his own salesmen. Furthermore the jobber declares that it by no means pays him to get into a squabble with a regular customer over whether he shall honor his order for a case of some specialty or not.

The agents, or at least many of them, answer this by agreeing to pay the profit on an order to any jobber who carts goods out to a retailer and has them turned down for any reason reflecting on the specialty salesman. They will also pay the cartage both ways. But they will not pay profit or cartage on any order turned down by the retailer simply because he has irresponsibly decided he doesn't want the goods. In that case they think the jobber ought to hold him to his contract.

The new association has held several conferences with leading jobbers during the past week in an effort to see if some system cannot be arranged by which the specialty orders may be given a better status. Nothing definite has been arranged as yet, however.

Another object of the organization is to protect the members' interests in such matters as holding prices. From now on if any members sees the goods represented by another member being cut or mistreated he will notify the secretary of the association, who will in turn notify the manufacturers' representative chiefly interested.

At the present time the Association of Manufacturers' Representatives is entirely local, but active efforts are to be made at once to make it national.

Erie Merchants' Exchange Agitating for Saturday Half-holiday.

Pittston Association Trying to Stop Suit Clubs. Erie Exchange Employing Detectives to Stop Poultry Raffling.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Erie, Pa., Nov. 29, 1907.

The Erie Business Men's Exchange is agitating for a general Saturday half-holiday movement during July and August, 1908. Many of the employers who pay their help on Saturday nights will be requested to change their pay days to Friday, or some other day of the week. Poultry raffling has grown to large proportions in Erie until more poultry is disposed of in that way than through the regular dealers. Having been unable to secure the enforcement of the law at the hands of the city and county officials, the exchange has employed detective O. O. Wiard, and numerous arrests are being made this week.

The Mercantile Protective Association of Pittston and vicinity admitted two new members at its last meeting. Secretary D. M. Evans and Hon. W. W. Hall were appointed a committee to provide ways and means for stopping suit clubs and poultry raffling.

The Erie Business Men's Exchange was addressed Friday, November 22d, by Mr. De Forest Porter, advertising manager for the Sweeney Co., of Buffalo, on the subject of "Advertising." The meeting was the largest that has ever been held in the rooms of the Exchange, and the talk was much appreciated by those who listened to it.

State Secretary A. M. Howes will attend a meeting at New Castle on Friday night to organize a General Merchants' Association. Committee in charge of arrangements for the meeting are Scott Paisley, chairman; Oliver Moore, secretary; E. O'Brien, C. E. Thomas, Will Aiken. Committee on by-laws, J. J. Dean, chairman; D. Bollard, W. S. Rice, Wm. Veach, George Gibson. John A. Green, secretary of the National Association of Retail Grocers, is also expected to be present.

A. M. Howes,
State Secretary.

Credit Men Ask That Debtors Be Leniently Treated.

The Credit Men's Associations of Dallas and Fort Worth, Texas, have issued a statement to the credit men of the United States, copy of which has been sent the "Grocery World." The statement deals with the financial situation as it affects credits, and the salient paragraphs are as follows:—

To the Credit Men of the United States:—

Herewith we inclose you a copy of a statement of conditions in Texas, issued by the jobbers and manufacturers of Dallas. The statement is accurate, conservative, and speaks for itself.

Our purpose in presenting this, at this time, is to offer some suggestions as to the wisest policy to be pursued by creditors in the present disturbed condition of business. There can be no doubt in the world that as soon as Texas can market her products, her merchants and financial institutions will be in excellent condition, but, until the outside world can furnish money to pay for these products, it is clear that debtors cannot pay, and creditors must be indulgent in the matter of collecting their accounts.

The jobbers and banks of the State of Texas are a unit in their determination not to press any solvent debtor until these products can be realized upon. To do otherwise would force solvent concerns into bankruptcy, which would postpone the date of payment of their debts, thus working a hardship on both the debtor and creditor, to no purpose.

This is the sensible course to pursue, and the Dallas and Fort Worth Associations of Credit Men take this opportunity of recommending that the banks and jobbers, outside of the State of Texas, pursue the same course towards their debtors in this State, feeling assured that the local jobbers and banks will not attempt to take any advantage, whatsoever, but allow their debtors to pay as rapidly as possible, and to pro rate their payments among creditors, both within and without the State.

We, therefore, urge upon all creditors, outside of the State of Texas, the necessity of forbearing to crowd their customers too severely, and not to force solvent merchants into bankruptcy.

Blast No. 2 From Woman's Home Companion.

Under Title "Keep the Bins Closed," Woman's Paper Bases Second Attack on Grocery Trade Upon a Few Exceptional Instances. Thinly Disguised Puff for Park & Tilford, of New York.

In the December number of the Woman's Home Companion" other blast at the average grocer's ethods of conducting his business let loose, the article being unded on a number of imaginary exceptional instances. The title "Keep the Bins Closed." The ar-le is longer than the first of the ries, occupying three pages. The ortions reproduced, however, con-in everything that is important the retail grocer:—

Every woman is a power for food cleanliness, whether she boards a street car and hurries down town to attend a grocery sale of a much advertised department store in a bustling city, or rides across the plains, five, ten or fifteen miles, in a spring wagon or buckboard to do her trading at one of the two general stores of which the county seat may boast.

The health officer cannot force the grocer to provide oiled paper with which to handle butter, cheese, etc., when cutting and weighing it, but the housewife can, by going to a store where oiled paper is used. He cannot force the grocer to supply his clerks with running water, a decent sink or basin and clean towels for wash purposes, but the housewife can, if she insists on clean hands. He cannot force the grocer to equip his store with the proper scoops and forks for ladling out food stuffs, but the housewife can, by refusing to trade with a man who digs out prunes, pickles and mackerel with his hands, and wipes the accumulation of filth on his already overworked and discolored waiting apron.

Perhaps your grocer is a man of a different stamp—a self-respecting American citizen whom you are glad to know, whose family belongs to your church, whose store, like his home, is sweet and clean and pure. We know such grocers, and we are proud of them. To them we look for much assistance in our fight for decent food conditions. But you may not be so fortunate in all your tradesmen. You may find that your grocer neighbor, after all, is not clean; and then, too, where can you escape the so-called foreign population? Who is your butcher, your green-grocer, your delicatessen man, your baker, and often your staple grocer, but the thrifty, so-called foreigner who can take a few hundred dollars saved while he worked on the streets and open a store while you are still living beyond your salary? And you expect this man who in his own country may have lived in a hut with a dirt floor, who slept in a lodging house, twenty men to a room, while saving to bring his family to America, who is living to-day in a dirty, tumble-down cottage far beyond the confines of your trim yard or in a tenement which you consider part of the slums—you expect this man to know how to run a sanitary, clean grocery. He can do it—in time, but you, as a good American housekeeper, can and must train him to run it decently.

If you do not believe this, come with the writer to two stores. One is in a pretty Connecticut village. You always think of Connecticut as a particularly tidy, trig, well-ordered State. But this is a hot Saturday afternoon, and suburbanites are pouring into the store, the hotels are full, the country club has a rush. The distracted grocer needs every bit of help he can rally. So his wife comes in, wearing a supiciously clean shirt waist with much cheap lace adornment above a black mohair skirt filthy enough to stand, like the proverbial printer's towel, quite alone She brings the children with her, because she is too poor to employ a "girl," let alone a nurse maid. One of the children, a little girl whose curly hair is matted beyond recourse to the ordinary brushing and combing, with hands that suggest mud pies and a pinafore that only the most vigorous treatment could restore to freshness, is happily entertained building a fort with block sugar in one bin. A brother, only a year or so older, in the same need of bathing and clean raiment, is filling an order for bulk crackers from another bin. The littlest one, a babe just able to sit up and play, is lying in a wicker carriage whose pillows and fittings are nothing short of sickening. Suddenly the baby sets up a wail, the mother starts to carry it into a rear room, when an urgent customer appears on the scene, and the baby, arrayed in a single garment, is literally dumped into a big bin of rice, where it sits contentedly digging in the pretty white grains! And this is not an imaginary scene.

Again accompany the writer to the home of that grocer. It is a modern cottage, supplied with electric light, running water and bath room. The yard is overgrown with weeds, the kitchen is strewn with remains of meals and marks of greasy cookery. The once pretty living room shows the wall paper ruined by grease and finger marks, the gaudy pictures covered with fly specks and the tawdry furniture besmeared by dirty, childish hands. The bath room has never been put to its proper use, for the tub is filled with old papers, rags and trash. And that is the home of the man whom scores of so-called good housewives trust to dispense their food.

"But why," argues a critic, "jump always on the small store?"

Well, we won't! Again make a trip to the store of a large grocer, one of a string of stores under the direction of a well-known firm.

The shelves, ostentatiously hung with rather dusty-looking mosquito netting, are half hidden by flamboyant announcements of cut sales, reductions in canned goods, "specials" in coffee and tea, "cuts" in butter and eggs and potatoes. Men are scurrying about the store, clad in long coats that were once white. Customers elbow and shove. Small delivery boys dart in and out of doors. The entire place radiates enterprise, push and the run of custom dear to the heart of the modern merchant. Women read off their lists and hurry away. Telephone orders come in by the score. In fact, success is stamped all over the place, and in capital letters, too.

STEP BEHIND THE COUNTER.

But step behind the counter. Papers are strewn thickly all over the floor, which is slimy almost to the point of being dangerous, and yet the papers are not thick enough to hide the telltale marks of the chronic spitter. From a bin of coffee hangs a dirty rag. It was dropped there by a man who had just filled an order for kerosene. Some other man will look at his wife across the breakfast table, and inquire, "I wonder why this coffee tastes of coal oil?" and she will not know—because she never really knows her grocer or looks behind his counter. Nor does she go back to the refrigerator, where she would find open lard pails next to open butter tubs, and some especially high-priced bacon in the slab next to a freshly cut cheese. Nor does she find her way into the back room, where a hard-pushed delivery lad is sniveling over a fall, the result of stumbling over a big piece of bacon thrown to the floor by a busy clerk. Of course you say you can wash the bacon that lies on the floor that is filthy because the clerks are too busy to scrub. But do you—always?

"These are extreme cases," exclaims a housewife. "I never saw such scenes in the store where I trade. The man who takes my order always looks very nice."

Yes—but what of the man who fills your order? Do you ever look behind the counter, into the refrigerator or the back room?

Look at the slice of cream cheese delivered at your door. Is there a dark gray line just below the rind on either side, becoming fainter toward the centre of the slice? If so, you may be sure that the dirt on the knife used in cutting it has gradually been wiped off on the cheese and absorbed into its creamy body. That means dirty knives in the cheese box or cooler, and dirty knives in one place means dirty scoops in another.

The writer has been ordering at random from what might be termed nice-looking groceries; not the immaculate, model stores, but average stores at which apparently tidy housewives trade. And these are some of the foreign substances found in orders: Ten dead flies, perhaps victims of poison fly paper, in a pound package of pulverized sugar; a cigarette stub (very small) in a pound of bulk pearl tapioca; little rolls or wads of dust in a pound of bulk oatmeal; some leaves of strong, green tea in a pound of prunes; two dead cockroaches in a pint of bulk chopped pickles. All these represent open bins and barrels, unprotected from dust and fingering, and, generally speaking, uncleanly, unsanitary handling of all food stuffs in these stores. To be sure, these disgusting results might have been avoided by insisting on package goods, protected from the unwholesome environment of the unsanitary grocery, but the fact remains that you cannot buy everything in packages, or, at least, that we have not become fully educated to that ideal condition. Accordingly, the customer who purchases bulk groceries, who thinks little or nothing about brands and guarantees, who trusts her grocer without knowing him, is the chief victim of the unclean and unsanitary grocery store.

Now let us move on to the model or sanitary grocery.

Suppose you start with the grocery section of a large department store.

"Ah," exclaims a champion of the untidy grocery, "look at the staff of clerks you have here! Hundreds where the small grocer has a dozen."

Yes; but where the small grocery has two or three hundred customers in the course of the day, this department-store grocery has from five to ten thousand shoppers on the floor at once. Its floor space covers nearly half of a large city block. And all through those broad aisles are men, women and children buying and sampling and dropping crumbs and papers on the floor. And close on the heels of the shoppers come the sweepers, three of them, armed with long-handled brushes, who pace the aisles day in and day out, preventing the food samples from being ground into the flooring.

Each section, with its counters and shelving how immaculate! Perhaps you think that another staff of porters and cleaners keep these in order but you are mistaken. Each clerk takes care of his or her section. Each clerk is held responsible for the condition of the floor behind his counter, for the shelving, the scales and the scoops or knives. These must be cleaned when trade is dull. And quite frequently these clerks are gathered in a great assembly room for a talk on cleanliness and careful handling of goods. They are warned against handling delicatessen goods, butter, cheese, etc., without oiled paper. Every point of store and personal cleanliness is discussed, and when a clerk has been reprimanded a few times about some breach of sanitation or personal cleanliness, he is dismissed.

In some departments, such as meats, delicatessen, butter, bakestuffs, etc., the clerks wear white coats and aprons supplied and laundered free by the firm. The girls are encouraged to wear white aprons. The motto of this store is "Cleanliness Regulates the Volume of Trade."

Another model store inspected was that of a firm which handles only staple groceries, branded goods, perfumes and candy, and no fresh or green groceries save oranges, lemons, imported grapes and grapefruit. In this store, of course, package goods predominate—a fact which adds materially to the cleanliness of the store, the convenience of the grocer, the speed of the service to the customers, and lastly, to the safety of the customers' health. There isn't a woman in the land who would not enjoy spending an hour or two in this clean, sweet-smelling store. Here, with a staff of two hundred and fifty men and boys, ten thousand orders are filled in a day. No spittoons are provided for the workers, but at every turn of the rooms or floors where orders are filled are signs, "No Spitting Allowed."

In this store the employee who is a chronic spitter is admonished once, warned once and then dismissed.

Instead of advertisements announcing cuts in groceries, at intervals above all bins and in all the storerooms where orders are filled are signs "Keep the Bins Closed."

The twelve-year-old lad who suggested the posting of this sign

"The Limit of Rare Quality"

You may or may not have seen our trade mark, the "Pure Food Boy."

If you haven't, we've both missed something: We, because we haven't had your trade; you, because you have so far missed knowing the purest, sweetest brand of corn, peas, string beans, etc., packed—the Olney brand.

Guaranteed as pure as the growing things themselves. But the flavor is the strong point. "Our Products Retain the Harvest's Ripe Flavor." This point has always distinguished Olney canned products from others. It's partly produced by our knowledge of how to grow fruits and vegetables which reach the limit of rare quality, and partly by advanced canning processes that are matched nowhere else in this country.

received an award of $2 for his suggestion. This firm does not hold conferences or deliver lectures, but distributes among its employees bulletins or leaflets, advocating tidiness, cleanliness, promptness, courtesy, etc., and offers an award of $2 for every practical suggestion made by an employee for the betterment of the service or the appearance of its stores.

In this store one boy does nothing but wield the long-handled, soft brush that does not raise the dust on the show-room floor. One man does nothing but fill butter orders. He is dressed in white apron and coat, is well supplied with oiled paper, so that his bare hand never touches the butter. Close at hand is running water and a clean towel. Another man washes bottles in which vinegar and molasses as well as bulk liquors are delivered. He has an enormous fresh towel daily, running water, of course, and works in front of a gas jet, before which every washed bottle must be held for inspection. Across the aisle from this man is a scouring table, where a brisk colored youth polishes scoops, spoons, ladles, etc.

"Fine," exclaims a sarcastic grocer with five or six clerks at his command. "Any one can do that with a big staff."

But how does this sarcastic grocer manage his store? He cannot afford a small boy to sweep at $3 a week, but whenever trade is brisk he stands in his doorway and impresses a small boy into temporary service. He may pay him a quarter or a half dollar to make special deliveries. In the course of a week he spends thus from $4 to $5—and yet has no one to sweep his floor. This work is done after closing hours by tired clerks, who are not trained to close the bins before they sweep. In this store there is no regular time for scrubbing the floor, nor washing the windows, nor cleaning the shelves. Everything is done in haphazard style, and the result is general untidiness. Some very small stores model stores they were—were managed with as much system as the large metropolitan groceries, and were just as clean. With the aid of package goods, manufactured and packed under real government supervision and guaranteed by manufacturers of acknowledged reputation, this same system of management which makes the grocery department of a great commercial institution a thing of beauty, an appetizing panorama, can at least make the side street or country store sanitary and attractive. The man who does not know how to systematize his business and who has no time to keep his store clean is the grocer whose business acquaintance you want to drop, whose wares you should leave severely alone.

Mr. Gerald Byrne, superintendent of a mammoth grocery department in one of New York's largest department stores, said, "The clean grocery store, large or small, is the result of system, organization and management. The manager or proprietor of a grocery who will not tolerate personal untidiness or uncleanly handling of goods will soon have a force of capable, clean clerks through force of example and fear of dismissal He can take a raw boy from a dirty home and make a clean grocery clerk, through sheer force of character and training, but you cannot expect the man whose home is filthy to maintain a sanitary, clean grocery. Pick your grocer, as you would your servant, for cleanliness first, last and always."

And the truth of this statement can be seen in your own town, where you can find the model grocer if you hunt for him. Make a tour of the groceries in your own neighboorhood. You will be able to choose between clean groceries and groceries of varying degrees of unclcanlincss. You will be supplementing the efforts of the health officers, doing your part of the team work, and getting one step nearer to the point where you can say, with truth, "I know my grocer."

A comparison of prices and quality between the clean and the dirty grocery will be discussed in the next article, together with methods by which the housekeeper can assist the grocer in his task of maintaining a clean store. This article has treated of the way in which you may co-operate with the health officer in his war on unclean groceries; next month we shall learn how to co-operate with the clean grocer and the clean manufacturer in their war on unclean goods. "Know your grocer and co-operate with him" will be the slogan.

This article is a thinly disguised write-up for Park & Tilford, the retail grocers of New York City. Several photographic illustrations are used, nearly all of these being views of departments of the Park & Tilford Store.

Magazine Notes.

A Noteworthy and Helpful Series of Articles.

The second of Dr. George Lincoln Walton's series of five popular papers on "Worry and Allied Mental States" appears in the December "Lippincott's, under the title of "The Doubting Folly." The author's long experience as a neurologist has given him a keen insight into the troublesome mental maladies with which so many of the sanest of us are afflicted, and he has written the articles in a breezy, non-technical way that makes them good reading. All who suffer from sleeplessness, undue self-consciousness, hypochondria, obsessions, or the worrying habit will find these articles decidedly helpful, for Dr. Walton explains how the disorders may be overcome. The complete novel in this issue is "The Career," by Kathryn Jarboe. It is a very striking story of a young musical genius who marries a man who knows nothing and cares less about music, which situation brings on troubles a-plenty. It is a story which will appeal with especial force to those musically inclined, but there is small likelihood of anybody who starts to read the story laying it down before it is finished. Half a dozen articles on timely subjects, a wide variety of short stories, some charming poetry and sixteen pages of original humorous matter complete the number. Many of the offerings have a Christmas flavor, which will enhance the value of the magazine to those whose hearts are attuned to the season of good cheer now rapidly approaching.

The Dog May Bite

Honestly, you will be much more likely to succeed by pushing Hotel Astor Coffee than by pushing a blend of your own.

We have been in coffee blending for many years. Obviously, we must know more about it than you do. And then Hotel Astor Coffee has been tried on the dog—the hardest dog to please in the United States—the patrons of the most exclusive hotels of New York City. The dog pronounced it good at once, and with the stamp of weighty approval upon it we offer it to you.

When you blend your own coffee the dog you try it on is your own customers—that's risky; the dog may bite.

The "Woman's Home Companion" aims another blow at the retail grocery business in its December number. Portions of the second article appear elsewhere. The theme is that consumers everywhere should pry into the back rooms and the back-of-the-counter portions of their grocers' stores and by meddling interference compel cleanliness.

Woman's Home Companion No. 2.

It is not the theory of clean stores that the "Grocery World" objects to in these "Woman's Home Companion" articles. It is the smug holding up of isolated, exceptional or more probably imaginary cases as a false illustration of the methods of grocers in general. Naturally, the article would be tame without that, and that is why "literary license" is so recklessly resorted to.

Take the description of the Connecticut grocer whose bedraggled wife quartered her filthy baby in the rice bin, and whose untidy home is described with such minuteness. As a matter of fact, the dirtiest part of that picture seems to be the wife, who might be a subscriber to the "Woman's Home Companion." The "Grocery World" will wager, however, without the slightest investigation, that that incident is wholly imaginary. Even if it were true, has it legitimate place in an article dealing with general grocery conditions?

The "Woman's Home Companion" goes almost exclusively to women, and it is to housewives that its attacks upon grocers are addressed. The "Grocery World" wishes to make another wager: that in any town or city in the United States, the average grocery store will be found equal in cleanliness to the average kitchen.

The Java Coffee Ruling.

One grudge which the manufacturing and distributing grocery interests of the country legitimately has against the Federal Food Board, which means Dr. Wiley, is its persistent disturbance of the trade with rules and regulations which are wholly unenforceable yet unsettling in the extreme.

The latest instance is the Java coffee ruling published last week. In substance it provides that only coffee actually grown on the island of Java can henceforth be sold as "Java." Coffee from the contiguous islands, all heretofore sold as Java, must henceforth be sold under a name indicating the place of origin.

No retailer, practically no jobber, and very few importers, can know definitely whether the coffee which comes to them as Java is actually grown on Java island or the island next door. Consequently from now they will, in their own minds, be living over a volcano, never knowing what moment they may be attacked for an offense of whose commission they will be totally ignorant. And this condition of mind will in no sense be modified by the fact that the Java ruling is absolutely unenforceable.

For it is unenforceable, without a doubt. The coffee grown on Java island and the nearby islands is practically identical in every way. It is grown from the same seed, in the same soil and under the same climate. What will there be, then, in the very beginning, to arouse the Food Board's suspicion that the coffee labeled Java is not Java? Or, if you grant the existence of something to arouse suspicion, how may that suspicion be confirmed? By chemical analysis? That could not possibly show difference, since there is none, and attempting to trace the shipment back to its source would be equally chimerical.

Is it not plain, therfore, that this order can never be enforced? And is it not equally plain that despite its unenforceability, it will cause unquestionable disturbance? What can possibly animate the majority members of the Food Board in permitting Dr. Wiley to make such a rabid nuisance of himself!

A Dangerous Suggestion.

The "Interstate Cotton Seed Crushers' Association" is a small publication issued in the South for the purpose of exploiting the different phases of the cotton oil industry. Under the head of "Improve the Quality and Increase the Quantity of Butter," the following clever suggestion appeared in the last number:—

> Heat a quantity of good deordorized cooking (cotton seed) oil to about blood heat, and just before beginning to churn, add to the milk, using about half teacupful to each gallon of milk, and proceed as usual.
> Good cooking oil can be bought from any progressive grocer at about 50 cents or less per gallon, which is about 6½ cents per pound.
> A three-gallon churning will take a pound of oil. It will hasten the coming of the butter, assist in its better collection, improve the quality of both it and the buttermilk, and being returned as butter will give, with the better collection of the butter fat, an increased yield of a pound to a pound and a half of butter and a profit equal to the difference between the selling price of the butter and the cost price of the oil.

The writer is not a dairyman and therefore does not know whether the addition of cotton oil to butter will or will not improve its quality and increase its quantity. But, knowing something of the dairy laws, he does know that such a process would produce adulterated butter that could not be sold except under heavy tax and rigid restrictions.

Free to "Grocery World" Readers

The "Grocery World" has on hand about five hundred copies of a book on window dressing, originally published by Sprague, Warner & Co., of Chicago, Ill. It was originally intended to use the book as a premium, but after inspection it was considered scarcely good enough, and since that the copies have lain on our shelves because of uncertainty as to what use to make of them. It must not be assumed that the book is worthless—it has a number of good things in it, but is scarcely up to what the "Grocery World" thinks such a book should be.

Now we propose to give a copy to any subscriber who may want it, free of all cost save the postage of seven cents.

Will This Railroad Gouge Extend Over the Whole Country?

Northwest Jobbers Refuse Demand of Freight Agents to Put Up Bond to Cover Freight Credits. Say Railroads Should Furnish Bond to Cover Unpaid Freight Claims.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Spokane, Wash.,
Nov. 25, 1907.

Members of the Spokane Wholesale Merchants' Association at an open meeting in the Chamber of Commerce, November 19th, decided unanimously to resist the demand of the Spokane Local Freight Agents' Association that all dealers receiving freight over the Harriman, Hill and other lines operating in this part of the country deposit surety bonds or pay cash for shipments. This statement was given out by the wholesalers:—

> We figure that if Spokane wholesalers comply with the demand, that they put up surety bonds for premiums. The only action we shall take will be to refuse to put any bond, and simply pay cash as we have done in the past. The credit asked by the Spokane merchants from the freight departments of the railroads is inconsiderable. One member of the association called up the railroad and ascertained the amount that he was indebted to them and found it to be $18. He has claims filed with the various railroads, some of them two and three years old, for more than $1,200. The railroad companies should furnish the bond rather than the merchant. As it is now anyone receiving freight must pay any overcharge and then put in a claim for it, and if he were under bond to the railroad company he would be just that much more helpless.

The text of the notice to the wholesale merchants from the Freight Agents' Association follows:—

> The several railroads represented in the Spokane Local Freight Agents' Association, through their respective accounting departments, have determined that an approved surety bond will be required of all persons receiving credit from the various freight departments of the city. The amount of sueh bond as regards a given firm or individual will be determined upon applieation of such firm or individual to the association and the premium upon such bond must be borne by the applicant, and it is purposed to have the same effective on and after November 25, 1907. The object of this communication is to apprise you of the change to be inaugurated and to afford ample time to arrange for it. On and after the date mentioned all persons who have not given sueh bond will be required to pay eash before receiving freight.

Huyler's Couldn't Put it Over Callanan.

The Latest of the New York City Grocer's Conflicts for the Preservation of His Rights. Huyler Wouldn't Sell Him Unless He Boycotted Other Candies, Which He Refused to Do.

Mr. L. J. Callanan, the widely-known New York City retail grocer, has a refreshing way of meeting abuses by manufacturers or jobbers. Several times large concerns have attempted to become fresh with Mr. Callanan, but never yet had any success.

Mr. Callanan's latest controversy for the protection of his rights was waged against Huyler's, the candy people. In a statement sent the "Grocery World" during the week he tells the story in characteristic fashion:—

For years I sold oranges, lemons and (at times) Malaga grapes in their season. Orders from the country came continually for fruits, espceially for oranges and lemons. Last Spring I deeided to open a special department for the sale of fruits and to make a feature of putting up baskets of the ehoicest fruits in the market.

When filling the orders for baskets of fruit, I found that, in nearly every instance, a box of eandy was also ordered. This was troublesome, as I had to send for a box of this or of that kind, aeeording as one or another was required.

Having made the faney fruit department a suecess beyond my most sanguine expectations, I deeided to add a confectionery department to my stock of choice grocerics, wines, liquors, eigars and fancy fruits.

Speaking to one of my customers of the kind of confectionery I intended to keep, I mentioned Maillard's, Huyler's, Wallace's, Lowney's and Chocolate Menier. "Why," said he, "Huyler will not sell you his best candies unless you agree not to sell any other but his." I could hardly believe my ears. He said: "That is a fact. He has got a line of goods which he calls his specialties and which he will sell to anyone, but he will not sell you his fancy goods unless you agree not to sell any other candies."

I sent for Huyler's salesman and asked him if he would sell me a full line of Huyler's candies. He said he would, but I would have to act as an agent for him and to sell no other candies. Huyler's specialties I could have on the same terms as in the ease of other large groeers. I told the salesman that unless he sold me his best candies as well as what he called his specialties, I would not sell a pound of his goods, and that I had my opinion of any business man who would eonsent to his terms —that I would not do so under any circumstances.

For this reason I am not putting in Huyler's goods. I am putting in Maillard's, Wallaee's, Lowney's and Choeolate Menier, all of which I believe to be as good as any candies made.

Oleo Sales Stimulated by High Butter.

The output of oleomargarine in Chicago district, the oleo centre of the United States, for the month of October, was 441,563 pounds colored and 5,860,704 pounds of uncolored, a total of 6,302,267 pounds, against this is 259,271 pounds colored and 4,348,924 pounds of uncolored, or a total of 4,608,195 pounds for the same months a year ago; and 383,342 pounds of colored and 4,263,260 pounds of uncolored, or a total of 4,646,602 pounds for the previous month. The high price of butter is the cause of the increased sales.

Odd Change in Jobbers' Attitude. Cocoa Falling Off in Pric The Government's Suit Against the American Tobacco C

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, Nov. 29, 1907.

An odd change in attitude has been made on the part of some of the jobbers who a short time ago were advising retail grocers to advance prices and who now say that it is time to reduce the quotations on a number of lines. The former plea for higher prices was that unless the retailer got a more comfortable margin of profit he would finally land in bankruptcy or something of that kind. Now, it is said that if the retailer tries to keep up quotations to the present levels he will kill or lessen the demand for some products. Not all of the jobbers have been so quick in beating a retreat on the price question, and those who have done so ascribe their present action, of course, to the financial situation.

Another side to the question is seen by some of the retailers. An officer of the New York Retail Grocers' Union said that it is unreasonable to expect the retailers to reduce their prices the minute a few changes are made in the wholesale quotations. Quite commonly the retailer has bought supplies at the old prices and should have a fair time for selling off what he has on hand before he reduces prices much—which is exactly what the jobber himself is doing to a large extent. It is easy for the jobber to offer new prices on articles when he has sold off his old stock and can buy new supplies for less than the old quotations. As to many kinds of articles the retailer is not so fortunate.

Another point made by the officer of the association is that it was true enough, as jobbers were saying recently, that the margins of the retailer have been too small. So, if the margins are now a little larger, he should enjoy the advantage, at least for a time.

One of the daily papers went to the trouble on Wednesday to send reporters to different parts of the city to ascertain if there is any truth in the report of meat and groceries being cheaper than they were. The conclusion was that if there is any decrease in prices it is in the wholesale and not in the retail stores, and quotations were given as obtained from stores in differe parts of the city. Reductions prices of butter, eggs and all kin of meat and poultry have tak place inside of two or three week according to quotations furnish by wholesale merchants, but the r tailers had not made reduction except in poultry.

The wide variations in the pric in retail stores in various parts the city were made apparent in t figures, as published, but this is fact that is familiar enough, even the public, and the reporters ev dently did not take into accou variations in the quality that a count for some differences in price

Cocoa products of various kin are among those affected by t tendency toward lower prices. T demand is said to have declined co siderably, and as a result the pri of the bean has fallen about 5 cen a pound, a decline of about 20 p cent. The importers say that t supplies here and abroad are le than they were a year ago, so tha the decline is due entirely to t lessened consumption. It is al said that speculation in the bea forced the prices of the raw ma terial up too high, and that this ha been one of the causes of peopl not consuming as much of t manufactured products as formerl The large manufacturers are sai to have bought freely ahead at t higher prices.

Consumption of other coco products has not been so much re duced, it is said, but their prices ar not likely to be maintained when t beans have come down.

While the drop in the price of t beans is quite sharp, it is remem bered that it is not much as com pared with the large advance tha has taken place in the last tw years. The quotations this wee have been about 20 to 21 cents, a compared with 25 to 26 cents month ago. A year ago the sam grades were selling at 15 to 17 cent

The Government's suit against e American Tobacco Co., accused being an illegal combination in straint of trade, has been on trial r a couple of weeks and is still progress. The witnesses have ld of the buying up of various omestic concerns and of the deal ith the English arm of the concern control the world's trade. A ature this week was the testimony Percival S. Hill, the vice-presi- nt of the American company, who lmitted that the combine owns the nited Cigar Stores Co., and said at as far as he knew no denial of is had ever been made. A letter om the witness, written in 1902 to Boston firm, was produced. In is letter Mr. Hill said that it ould be well to deny all rumors the American Tobacco Co. being hind the United Cigar Stores Co. Vhen questioned as to this incon- stency, he said that this was the ly instance, as far as he knew.

The witness said that the com- ne sold to its retail branch, with numerous stores in New York, about the same prices as to job- rs, but gave the former a little lvantage in order to encourage the le of the American products. The g company would not sell to any tailer in New York except its own tail branch, and the remainder of e retail trade was supplied rough the Metropolitan Tobacco o.

Letters were read from Mr. Hill's tter book in which there were sug- stions of a scheme to sell Ha- ına cigars at the same price to holesalers and retailers in order to ıt some of the former out of busi- ss. Among the importers who ere approached with this sugges- on were the grocery firms of Park Tilford and of Acker, Merrall & ondit. In answer to a question, e witness said that he did not ıow whether or not the combine vns any stock in Park & Tilford, ıt he was quite sure it does in cker, Merrall & Condit.

It was shown that, in some in- ances, officers of subsidiary com- nies carried on business with each her and did not know, on either le, that the other company was so owned by the Trust. Letters ere sent out to all subsidiary com- nies asking them to oppose legis- ion in Congress against coupons. ıe advertising bills in 1906 amounted to something like $10,000,000, not including items of subsidiary concerns.

Oliver Spitzer, a dock superintendent of the American Sugar Refining Co., and Richard Kehoe, another employee, have been held in bail by the United States Commissioner in Brooklyn on the charge of trying to bribe an agent of the United States Treasury Department. They asked the agent to overlook an erroneous return as to the weight of raw sugar received at two of the refineries, the object being to cheat the Government of its revenues by underweighing. The men themselves were to profit by the scheme, it is supposed, the officials of the company disclaiming all knowledge of it.

Creditors filed a petition in bankruptcy Wednesday against Arthur E. Netzband, who has a retail grocery store at 2661 Third avenue and has four other stores in the borough of the Bronx. The petitioning creditors are Edward D. Depew & Co., $535; R. C. Williams & Co., $1,465; William S. Huselton & Co., $1,713. It is alleged that he is insolvent and has transferred two of his stores within a few days in an effort to give illegal preferences. One of the stores, at Third avenue and 184th street, he transferred to his wife, who is a creditor for $1,250; another store, at 918 Westchester avenue, he transferred to a woman creditor who has a claim for $1,000, it is alleged.

The liabilities are estimated at $8,000 and the assets at half as much. He began business twelve years ago with one store. The court appointed Charles L. Brookheim receiver.

Frederick Meyers, a clerk employed in the grocery store of William Schrotter, 403 Broadway, Brooklyn, attempted suicide Wednesday morning and incidentally Mr. Schrotter and his family had a narrow escape from being suffocated by illuminating gas. The grocer was awakened by the odor and on making search found that his clerk, who slept in the house, had made elaborate arrangements to end his life by turning on the gas and stuffing one end of the rubber gas tube into his mouth. The young man, who is 22 years of age, had been disappointed in love. It was said at the hospital that he is likely to die.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market is well maintained as to price, but sluggish as to demand. The dullness is partly due to the season and partly to the lack of money. That values should be so steadily held under the circumstances shows the underlying strength of the market. Low grades can scarcely decline, owing to scarcity, and the better grades, which might decline if left to themselves, are in fairly strong hands.

Coffee.

The coffee market is unchanged for the week, and this applies to all grades. Rio and Santos are dull, and the market is very narrow. Business is confined absolutely to spot wants, as the financial situation keeps buyers from going into large transactions. Milds are unchanged and dull, as are Java and Mocha.

Sugar.

The sugar market is showing some small signs of strength. Raws in Europe are slightly firmer. The refiners are coming into the market again, and the strength thereby created is increased by the fact that the Cuban crop will likely be about 25 per cent. short. The refined sugar market is unchanged, and the demand is light.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is unchanged and in light demand. Sugar syrup is moderately active at unchanged prices. Molasses is slow at ruling prices. New molasses is not yet cutting any figure.

Canned Goods.

The past week has been a dull one in the canned goods business. Tomatoes are steady at 80 cents f. o. b., no sales having been made below that as yet. The market, however, is rather heavy. Corn is unchanged and dull. Some Maine corn is now offered around $1, though the offerings are light, as the surplus over future sales is small. Peas are steady, scarce as to lower grades and quiet. Peaches are scarce and dull. Apples are unchanged and quiet. California canned goods are exceedingly dull in first hands and no changes in price are reported. The Baltimore small line is unchanged and not active.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are only fairly active, and prices show no change. Seeded raisins have declined probably ½ cent, due to increased supply, b the demand is still active and t price fairly firm. Loose raisins a dull and weak. Apricots are dull maintained prices. Peaches a dull and unchanged. Currants a active at ruling prices. Apples a weaker and declined.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans on spot are scarce a the quotation is therefore advanc —$2.30 to $2.40. To come fo ward, $2.10 to $2.20 is quote Marrows average $2.25 both spot and to come forward. Califo nia limas are moderately active a unchanged in price. Split pe both whole and dried, show change and are moderately activ

Fish.

The fish market is deadly dull, is usual around the holidays. grades of mackerel are slow, b fully maintained as to price, owi to light stocks. Cod, hake and ha dock are beginning to show son little demand, at ruling pric Salmon is a trifle easier, owing pressure to sell in certain quarte Domestic sardines are steady firm, but unchanged in price. T demand is light. Imported bran are very scarce, firm and high.

Butter.

The butter market remains stea and unchanged. The supply fresh stock is still about norm There is some movement in stora butter, and the present outlook for a steady and unchanged mark on all grades during the next fe days.

Eggs.

The market on fresh eggs is ve firm at an advance of 1 cent. T supply is still very low, and n enough fresh eggs are coming fo ward to supply the demand. T market for refrigerator eggs about on last week's basis. Stoc of storage eggs are large for th season, and higher prices do n seem likely in the near future. Th market all in all is healthy.

Provisions.

The market for regular and ski back hams is ¼ cent lower than week ago. The demand is scarce up to normal for the season. Th price is considerably lower than f a long time and consequently lower prices are looked for in th near future. Picnic hams are u changed. Smoked bacon has d clined ½ cent, as have dry sa bellies. Pure lard shows a decli of ¼ cent, but the demand is a

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

sorbing all local make. Compound lard has declined the same amount in sympathy. The outlook is for a steady and unchanged market. Barrel pork, dried beef and canned meats are dull and unchanged.

Cheese.

The cheese market is stationary. Most of the factories are closed for the winter, and stocks of cheese on hand are considerably less than a year ago. High prices have curtailed consumption, and the demand is therefore not up to standard. There is hardly likely to be any change before the first of the year. Under grades are still scarce and sell on arrival at relatively lower prices.

Poultry.

The market for turkeys remained firm at a maximum of 23 cents until the Thanksgiving trade ended, when it declined 1 to 2 cents on the highest grade and 2 to 3 cents on the under grades. The demand will determine whether prices will go any lower. Dressed chickens and fowls declined 1 cent per pound and are cleaning up very fairly. Ducks are unchanged. Game is scarce and firm.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Baltimore Canned Goods.

No. 1.

Nothing of special interest transpired in the tomato market during the week, and the quotations are practically unchanged. There is, of course, much talk about a reaction towards higher prices coming shortly, but with the unfavorable monetary conditions, which we reported in our letter last week, still prevailing it is not at all likely that there will be any change in the situation for the present, at least, although it would be welcomed by a large number of both the jobbers and packers. The steady buying which has continued indicates that the jobbers will want tomatoes after a while, and when the present financial flurry is over it will then be the time to look for a reaction in values.

Other lines of vegetables were fairly active during the week, but to a more limited extent. Sweet potatoes and string beans show indications of advancing. Fruits of all kinds continue dull and there are no new developments to mention. Peaches and pineapples are firm because of the light stocks.

The demand for cove oysters would cause an active market for them if the packers could obtain the raw material at fair prices, but the demand from the shippers places them almost beyond the reach of the canners. There is a good demand for the new pack of cove oysters.

No. 2.

Whatever might have been the volume of business transacted during the past week for 3s standard tomatoes (no matter whose standard), it has been evidently on the basis of 80 cents, f. o. b. The buyers seem to want standards and 80-cent standards; even a better standard would not bring more than 80 cents. With so few buyers in the field, it is easily understood just why such conditions might prevail, for buyers being few it was possible to locate the best standards on this basis, which though lower than previous marks heretofore named for 1907 packing, is in realty a full figure in comparison with declines notable as far as other commodities are concerned. Tomatoes having passed through one of the severest money panics ever known, or known since the tomato was packed, the shrinkage of less than 10 per cent. is remarkable and can be looked upon as a favorable symptom, assuring the strong position of this commodity in holding its own so well when matters financial were so exceptionally stringent. Furthermore, it is particularly notable that whatever decline was brought about it was felt more by the jobber who had over-bought, and seldom has any indication of pressure been noticed on the part of the packer, who at previous times, somewhat similar, has been the only one to indicate a weak position as regards his holdings.

Packers are not pressing their holdings of corn. Buyers indicate interest in this commodity but are inclined to withhold their orders a little longer and await further developments. The position of corn during the money crisis has been exceptionally firm, and whatever sales may have been confirmed during the past week do not indicate even as much of a decline as have been evidenced by tomatoes. Since the tomato and corn packers have practically paid off all their help and growers financial conditions can be reported among them as easy. In all probability, by the end of another week, the remaining unpaid and belated invoices will be in, and if the man at the other end does his part there is a chance largely in favor of packers having an exceptionally pleasant Thanksgiving.

Spices.

The market is fairly steady. There has been no unusual demand, and buying has been a sort of "hand-to-mouth" character.

Pepper continues unusually low and some has been reported at very low prices for January arrival. We do not expect to see any material changes until after the turn of the year.

Cayennes are unchanged, but firm. Stocks reported small.

Cloves continue to drop in price. The crop has proven to be an unusually large one.

Pimento (Allspice) stationary and in fair demand, crop being small. We do not anticipate a lower market.

Mace as well as nutmegs are in demand at this time and will continue good sellers during next month. Nutmegs particularly are low in price.

Cassias steady, but unchanged. Demand very fair.

Gingers are selling fairly well. Prices, however, are stationary.

Seeds:—Caraway in demand, market slightly easier, but not quotably lower. Poppy seed selling well. There has been some very heavy arrivals during last week. Mustard seed as well as celery, demand fair at unchanged prices.

McCORMICK & Co.

Imported Fish Products.

The fish business has been very dull last week, only hand-to-mouth business being done. Prices are fairly steady with a tendency in buyers' favor. The only exception to this rule are Norway mackerel. They are scarce, especially the large sizes, and firmly held. Demand is not very brisk, but it is sure to come soon, and prices then will surely go higher. Stocks are held in very few and very firm hands.

New Spanish red peppers (Pimentos) are now arriving, but shipments are readily taken up by the trade, as crop this season has been partly destroyed and higher prices are expected.

Imported oil sardines are very scarce. The situation is unchanged, no catch being reported from either France, Portugal or Norway

The first shipments of new sprats are now on the way and prices asked by the packers are considerably higher than those of last season. Our market is quite clear of sprats and first arrivals will find ready sale.

AMONG THE TRADE.

William Smedley, the well-known secretary of the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association, is now making a noise like a grandfather.

The trial of W. A. Miller & Co., charged with the sale of oleo without a license, occurred in the local Quarter Sessions Court during the week. The defense was novel and unique. The defendants, under the name of W. A. Miller & Co., acted as the agents for Morris & Co., of Chicago. It was in evidence that a Willlam Talbott received packages of oleomargarine bearing the business name of W. A. Miller & Co., and that he paid for them, as he alleged he had no bank account, in cash. The defense set up that while they acted as agents for Morris & Co., W. A. Miller & Co. being the trade name of Morris & Co. in Philadelphia, they did so for all merchandise, except oleomargarine, and that they had simply taken the orders for the oleomargarine from Mr. Talbott as an accommodation to him, and transmitted them to Morris & Co. in Chicago, and when Mr. Talbott paid the money for his order they transmitted the full amount to Morris & Co. in Chicago, and received no commissions or compensation either from him or Morris & Co. It was therefore contended that the sales did not take place in Philadelphia, but took place in Chicago, the defendants being simply the medium through which the orders were given, and the sales perfected in Chicago, and that therefore they were not required to have a State license. The firm is composed of J. Frederick Miller and Samuel B. Miller, and the jury acquitted the former and convicted the latter on the ground that he seemed to be the responsible agent.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

XXI.—Getting Strong By Bearing Burdens.

Shouldering small burdens strengthens the bearer for larger ones.

Many young men who are working in large establishments resent what they term the unloading of the bosses' burdens upon their shoulders, when in reality the cheerful shouldering of these burdens fit them for better things. Many lazy foremen, who want to shirk their own work, do shift their duties to other shoulders, and this same thing is often done by the hardest working and most competent foremen and managers, who want to bring out the strong qualities in the young men under their charge, and see what they amount to when weighed in the balance.

No matter from which cause it is that the young man falls heir to the burdens which properly belong to other shoulders, he should feel thankful for them so long as they are not too heavy for him, for it will pay him to remember that the more little burdens he bears while young the easier it will be for him to shoulder the greater burdens as they come to him, and in this manner he is soon able to shoulder a load which would have been impossible a few months earlier

The young man's mind develops the same as his body, and in shouldering the mental burdens he broadens himself for better and greater things.

Those who have the assistance of young men can do them no greater favor in the battle of life than to gradually allow them to shoulder the mental burdens and responsibility which rightfully belong to the chief. Most young men will consider such responsibilities as compliments and will make themselves more valuable because of the trust, and these are the men who will eventually become leaders in their line of work, whatever it may be.

Sun Never Sets on Dayton Scales.

The first computing scales which were made to weigh in money value, while crude in construction, were, nevertheless, the forerunners of the computing scales of to-day. The weakness of the first scales stimulated the makers to renewed efforts and with bulldog tenacity they stuck to the task and to-day the result of their work is evident.

In 1896 approximately 27,000 Dayton-Moneyweight Scales were in use and since that time the sales have increased to the enormous number of 225,000. Each year shows its steady gain over the preceding one, and the month of September, 1907, was 22 greater than September, 1906.

The United States are not alone in the use of these scales, for Canada, Mexico, England and Australia have adopted them with great enthusiasm. New fields are continually opening their doors to the irresistible forces of these scales and we find Bazil, Argentine, Chili, Peru and all South American countries falling in line. Cuba, Porto Rica, Hawaii, Cental America, Russia, Norway, Sweden, Germany, Austria, France, Spain, South Africa, India, Japan, China and the Philippines are seeing the advantages of our scales and are rapidly discarding the old methods.

The sun never sets on Dayton-Moneyweight Scales. Even Alaska has its quota of enthusiastic users.

The Moneyweight Scale Company of Chicago, with local sales offices in all prominent cities, are the sole agents and distributers of these scales in the United States. Their agents penetrate every section of the country and are always ready and willing to show and explain the unusual merits of an article which has done more in placing the retailing of merchandise on a safe and systematic basis than any other known device.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up according to strict rotation.

It is quite remarkable how the use of souvenir postal cards is increasing among grocers for advertising purposes. Messrs. Arbuckle & Collyer, retail grocers of Boston, Mass., send in for criticism a copy of one they are using. Here it is, somewhat reduced in size. The original card is about the size of an official postal:—

I am not informed how many returns the firm got for this card, but I am sure that by differently arranging it, the returns could be increased. By returns I mean requests for the free pictures, as that is the only feature of the card that could attract direct results. Apparently the main reason for issuing the card, i. e., the exploiting of the picture, is crowded into one corner where it is almost sure to be the last thing seen, if seen at all. I should have set the card in something like the following style:—

Any customer of ours, transient as well as regular, can have this beautiful dining-room picture for the asking. It is one of the most expensive things we ever gave away, but we give it to advertise our store, and nothing cheap could do that fitly.

There are certain cardinal principles about this store—clean, fresh, pure goods, houest weight and honest prices. It's a safe place to deal.

Arbuckle & Collyer, Grocers, 47 Camden Street, Boston, Mass.

If, as I assume, the object of this card is to get the picture out, I am sure that my card will do it better than the original one. Simply by making prominent the most prominent part of the advertisement.

Lowerre, Yonkers, N. Y., November 22, 1907.

Editor Science of Advertising.

Dear Sir:—Would like to have a card printed size same as inclosed, to be used for soliciting. Now I would kindly ask you to print in your next issue words suitable for same. Thanking you in advance I am

Yours respectfully,
W. LEYDECKER.

The card inclosed measured 3 x 5 inches, and was very neatly printed with a removal notice. I take it that now that Mr. Leydecker is settled in his new location, he wants to go out for new trade. I am not quite clear, however, what he means by a card to be used for soliciting. The card usually used for soliciting is an ordinary business card, which I am pretty sure is not what Mr. Leydecker wants. If he wants an advertisement to send through the mails, or distribute from house to house, he does not, in my judgment, need a card; it should take the form of a circular or folder. I should be very glad to write this for him, but I can't write the sort of matter I think ought to be written unless I have some data. In his letter Mr. Leydecker gives me none whatever. He should put in such an advertisement three or four specialties, as novel as possible, and say a few lines about each. If he will send me some details, I shall be very glad to help him out.

Dreams of the Road.

Out in Pittsburg, Pa., there's a wholesale grocery clerk who gave more thanks last Thursday than he ever gave before in his life.

He told me he was going to, and I'll bet he did.

This young gentleman has just had a lesson which will last him until he dies.

I get into the jobbing house where he's employed about once every three months. He has or had a fairly good job—half clerk and half store salesman; I suppose maybe he made $18 or $20 a week out of it. Anyway, he's married and got two children.

All the salesmen who get in there know that this clerk has for years simply been burning to go on the road. And knowing that, the boys have been wrongly swelling his head. He'd get 'em to talk about their road experiences and simply hang on their words.

"Oh, yes, it's a fascinating life, all right," one of 'em would tell him, "never gets stale. But you don't make enough money, old man, you don't make enough money. Just think of workin' a whole year for only $3,000!"

The fellow that said that never saw $3,000, but the clerk swallowed the josh every time. The boys simply filled him full of tales of big money and warm times. He used to listen and swallow hard and get sicker and sicker of his job every day.

I told him one day, "You don't want to believe all these lies about the road being a little heaven on earth; it ain't any such thing."

"Maybe not," he said, not at all convinced, "but I'm going to give it a try-out, all right, just as soon as I can get hold of something."

"Better go slow," I said, "if you ain't really cut out for the road you'll come an awful cropper. You've got a family, too, remember that."

Well, he started by getting hold of a little dried beef account. A little packer out in Pittsburg agreed to give him a commission on all the package dried beef he sold the retail trade.

Just about the time he got th account he had a little fuss with hi boss that in ordinary times wouldn have amounted to a picayune. Jus then, though, he was feeling chest over his dried beef account, an he got a little lippy. The dried bee man had solemnly assured him h could make $30 a week easy out o the account, so after a five-minut argument the clerk threw up a sal aried job and stepped blithlely ou on the most ticklish raft that a ten derfoot ever rode on—a busines where you can work like a nigge all day and never make a cent.

He worked on his dried beef fo ten days and made $2.67! Then h threw it up and looked up som of us to see if we couldn't get hi a chance on the road.

We all told him the same thing.

"The first question you'll b asked wherever you go," we said "will be 'where'd you work last an how much business did you do? If you've never done any business you're turned down. Nobody's go any time for learners, and nobody'l give a learner a decent territory."

He seemed a little down, but no enough to give it up yet. The fel low had some pluck.

Next he managed to get anothe little local account—a new sauc that the canny manufacture wanted introduced at the salesman' expense. That was commission, to —10 per cent., if I remember right

He worked on that six days an didn't sell a case! With this he ha a few little outlying towns, to whic the manufacturer kindly paid hi carfare. But for his solid week' work he didn't draw a dollar!

The head bookkeeper for the job bing house where the clerk used t work told me the rest. On Monday morning after the week's work o the sauce his old employer got a letter which he said after he rea it was the most pathetic he had ever received in his life.. The clerk's wife was sick with appendicitis, he had never saved any money out o his salary, for three weeks not a penny had come in, and they were clean down and out. Would he give him his old job back?

Well, the jobber had a heart an he did. The bookkeeper told me that when that poor devil walked in the next morning and opened his old desk, the tears of pure joy rolled down and wet the blotter.

Has he any more fine dreams of the road? No, and he never will have I'll bet that poor fellow went rough hell in those three weeks. ve had little tastes of it in my early ays on the road. Going from town o town, store to store, everybody ndifferent, curt and sometimes of- ensive, spending the evenings after weary day that didn't earn you a ou, in little homeless hotels with othing to do but to wonder what ———you'd do if you didn't do some business; doing this all over again the next day, fairly itching to smash the face of some dealer who wasn't man enough to give a salesman a decent word if he couldn't give him an order—by gravy, there's no experience like it!

Take my advice and don't go on the road unless you're cut out for it.

Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is best plained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to the Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and value "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated will ppear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. BRECKENRIDGE.

Mace.

This is the skinny substance or nner membranous covering in vhich the true nutmeg (Myristica ragrans) grows, in a similar way s the involucre which envelops the ommon filbert.

It is first of a bright red color, ut when pressed out flat and dried n the sun it assumes a yellowish r light brown tinge, and possesses pleasant aromatic smell, with a varm pungent taste. In curing it or market it is steeped in sea water nd afterwards well dried. Besides vild varieties there are, as with nutnegs, two kinds cultivated—the green, from the long nutmeg, which s darker in color and inferior in lavor and aroma; and the "Royal," which furnishes the finest and best nace, firm, flexible and oily.

Mace is extensively produced in Sumatra, Mauritius, Cayenne, Martinique and West Indies. It mostly reaches this country from Penang and Singapore in 100-pound bags, which should be tightly pressed to preserve the aroma.

Pure mace contains about 11 per cent. of water, 42 per cent. of alcoholic extract, and 2 per cent. of ash.

It should be chosen fresh, tough and of bright color, with rich fragrant odor and oily interior. The smaller pieces are considered the best. The qualities are usually classified as Finest Pickled Flake, Fine, and Ground. It has been found adulterated with a Malabar product, very like mace in appearance, but without any spicy flavor of its own, and when chewed has a resinous taste.

Mace is also sometimes deprived of a great portion of its essential oil by distillation, and sometimes mixed with wild mace.

Madeira Wines.

These are the well-known wines produced in the island of that name.

There are, of course, several kinds made there, the principal varieties being Malvasia, Bual, Sercial, Tinta and Verdelho; but the best Madeira is one of the choicest of the fortified wines, is of strong body, sweet and full flavored, with excellent bouquet.

It is produced from a mixture of black and white grapes, and its sale appears to be on the increase, though the consumption cannot be much enlarged because of the limited area of the island.

Madeiras usually contain 10 to 12 per cent. of pure alcohol, and are somewhat darker in color than sherries. Like ports, their quality improves very much with age.

Madeira requires great care in decanting, and the vessel should be quite as warm as the wine that enters it.

National Retailers.

The secretary of the National Retail Grocers' Association has written to the United States Secretary of Agriculture protesting against Dr. Wiley's idea of calling corn syrup glucose. The letter is as follows:—

Hon. James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture:—
Dear Sir:—We have just been advised that Dr. Wiley and his associates have about decided to rule that "corn syrup" is to be labeled under the old "glucose" label. I am authorized by the directors of the National Association of Retail Grocers to at once communicate to you our opposition to this change.
The obnoxious word "glucose" will materially injure or interfere with the sale of "corn syrup."
If, as we suppose, "corn syrup" is a healthy product made from corn, then we would ask you use your influence in leaving it under the brand of "corn syrup" rather than to change to "glucose."
Yours very truly,
JOHN A. GREEN,
Secretary.

Atlanta, Ga.

The Atlanta (Ga.) Wholesale Grocers' Association and the Atlanta Fruit and Produce Exchange have warned the retailers of the city that credits must be drawn tighter. The wholesale grocers have sent the following letter to each retailer in the city:—

Dear Sir:—Realizing that our success depends on the condition of the retail men, we make a few suggestions, which we hope will be considered and perhaps do good.
Facts that face the mercantile world at present are more strenuous than usual; the cost of all merchandise from first hands has reached the highest average level in twenty years and great care should be used not to continue the old selling prices, which will cut out all profit.
At best the retailer can make only 5 per cent. net on gross volume of business done—it is impossible to figure how you can keep selling at the old prices, because others are reported to do so, when goods have advanced at least 10 per cent. and you used to make not over 5 per cent.
Study your cost per unit and add profit to each article or your bills will push you out of business.
Wages are high at present and people should be able to pay, but here is even a greater danger than high prices and still the prices have a great play on it—credits.
Some salaries and wages have not been increased and will not meet the now larger bills for the same amount of necessities.
A few families are being thrown out of support by stopping of work by corporations due to the tightness of the money market, some of the wage earners are trying to drink up all the whiskey due to fear of being cut off soon, some are preparing to move to less dry States by January; it is necessary to be most careful now in your credits.
Do not ever open up an account unless the customer first spends cash with you and you become acquainted; then at the start get a statement of limit wanted and payments must be on short time. If all is not paid when due do not continue account until all is paid, then you may start over. Do not let any one get where you cannot afford to stop the account. When the limit is being approached, keep the amount down. If useless luxuries are bought and payments slow, know it means payments in the long run will not be made.
When any misfortunes come to customers, who have no tangible means of your making the money, it is your duty to let them go to the Associated Charities for aid, if you have money for such cases give it to this body who will use it for the best of all.
Get your stock in nice shape to take an inventory by January 1. Keep daily sales cash and credit, a record of goods purchased in a book and keep this book in your iron safe or take it home every night, else you won't be able to get your insurance in case of a fire. See if your policy is in a good company.
If you need advice about anything call up George H. Boynton, Bell 'phone 2018 main, and he will try to help you.
Hoping these suggestions will bear fruit, we remain,
Yours truly,
THE JOBBERS OF ATLANTA.
P. S.—High prices and credits. Use credit applications as a safeguard.

The Atlanta Fruit and Produce Exchange issued a similar letter.

French Facing High Food Problem Also.

It is a common saying in Paris that at every universal exposition the prices generally are raised for the occasion, and when the exposition is over the prices never come down again. But statistics just published show that Parisian tradesmen know how to raise the price without a universal exhibition. Since 1902 the price of bread has risen 15 per cent.; beef, 22 per cent.; veal, 14 per cent.; mutton, 25 per cent. pork, 27 per cent.; butter, 14 per cent.; cheese, 25 per cent.; fish, 50 per cent.; fresh vegetables, 15 per cent.; dried, vegetables, beans, etc. and celery, 30 per cent.; pastry, 25 per cent.; petroleum, 10 per cent. coal, 34 per cent.; charcoal, 24 per cent.; coffee, 25 per cent.; chocolate, 25 per cent.; candles, 10 per cent., and ironmongery, 25 per cent.

Think of it! Five thousand grocers in Pennsylvania alone are selling the Goff remedies. Every grocer in the country should be. The firm is making a proposition to those who are not handling their standard remedies that will enable them to make seventy per cent. profit. If you will write S. B. Goff & Sons Co., Camden, N. J., they will tell you how it is done.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

A Delicatessen Display.

I am submitting herewith an illustration of a very simple and yet neat and attractive delicatessen window display.

Construct a series of steps out of several pieces of wood and cover them with green paper or cheap cloth. On these steps display bottled delicacies (prepared mustard, sauce, catsup, pickles, pickled onions, tomato catsup, etc), and in the positions indicated in the drawing place cards with suitable suggestions on, such as: "Have you tried our delicatessen? Highest in quality, lowest in price and are packed in hygienic bottles, insuring absolute purity." A card or two may be placed at intervals along the rows of the bottles with suggestions as to prices.

If desired, the articles, instead of placing them in straight rows, may be placed in bulk.

The above display is very neat and the cost is practically nothing, yet at the same time it sets off the window so as to make it very attractive.

1521 Poplar street, Philadelphia, Pa.

A Holiday Window.

What is more attractive during the holiday season than a window fixed up with a Santa Claus in it?

The window here illustrated will not only attract the attention of the young folks, but the old as well. It is not expensive, as the decorations can be made by yourself or clerks.

At the back of the window make a simple imitation of a house with the end open, so as to show an open fire grate.

First put up your frame work, then cover with red cloth, and pencil with black crayon to imitate brick. Peak the roof, and on top make an imitation of a chimney, with cotton surrounding the top and left hanging over the edge in strands, to represent icicles. All this is very simply done.

Get a mask representing old Santa and place on top of chimney, with only head and shoulders showing, giving the appearance of him in the act of descending the chimney.

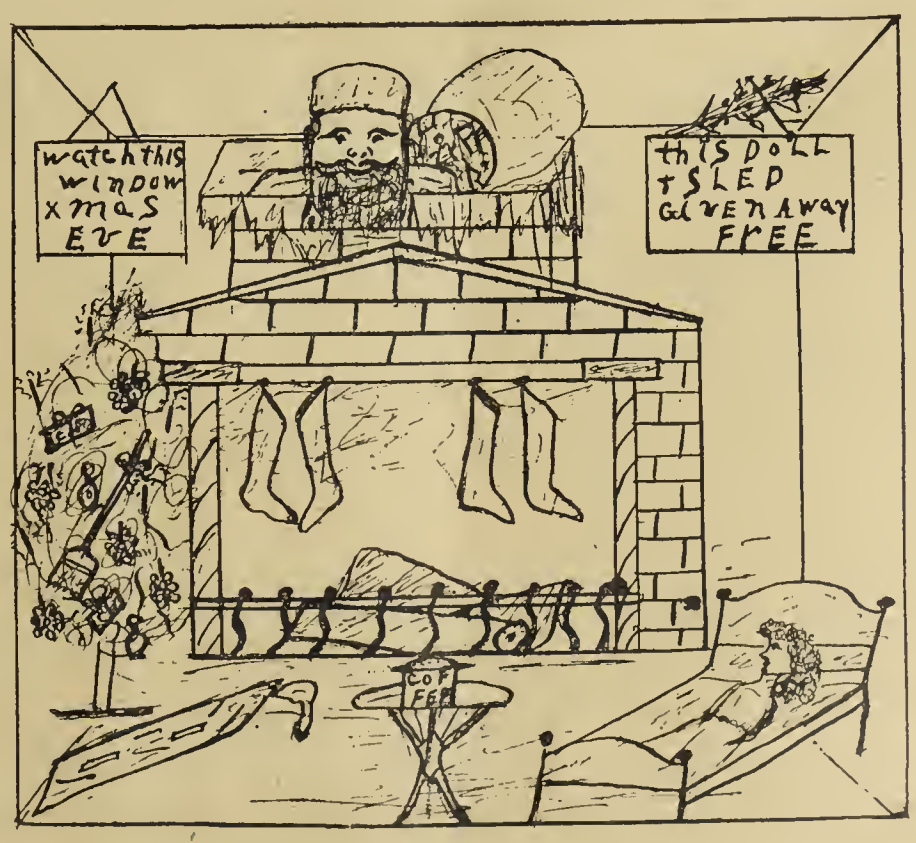
Have a bag filled either with toys or groceries placed with Santa on top of the chimney.

The fire-place can be made very realistic by placing strips of wood across the front from one side to the other, about a foot from the floor, with barrel staves cut so as to have a half-round edge, the same to be painted black, so as to make them have the appearance of iron and to imitate the fender. Back of this place pieces of logs with red lights hidden back or between them to give the appearance of fire. This will set it off very prettily at night. A candle and red tissue paper can be used for this.

Of course, with such a background you ought to have a little Christmas tree, which can be decorated with such holiday goods as bunches of white grapes, raisins, apples, oranges, etc., also toys of all kinds, not too large, however.

The window can be made still more attractive by placing a toy bed, with a doll lying in it, on one side, and a sled on the other. These might be given away in some kind of a prize drawing, if you desire.

I would suggest that in the centre of the window a table be placed, and on the table a glass jar filled with coffee and sealed. With every purchase of groceries give a ticket stating that each child under a certain age will be given a chance to guess how many grains of coffee are in the jar. The jar to be opened on Christmas eve and counted in the window.



The girl guessing the nearest to the number of grains will be given the doll and bed and the boy guessing the nearest will be given the sled. Those guessing the next nearest will be given the decorations of the tree, say the next twenty-five or until the tree is bare. The presents can be given by a boy dressed up as Santa Claus on Christmas eve.

The signs in the illustration will speak for themselves. You might stand a neat card in front of the table, calling the attention of the public to step inside the store and examine your holiday display.

This display is a change from the common run of the displays made during the year, and can be made the means of attracting lots of attention to your store.

Manufacturers who have adopted premium schemes to create a demand for their products, have always given the premiums to consumers. Where manufacturers have offered an incentive to grocers to push their goods, the incentive has always been small. It had to be small, because no individual manufacturer could afford to give a grocer from his individual profits anything more important than a silk hat, an umbrella, etc. But when twenty or more prominent manufacturers, whose products are sold by grocers everywhere, set aside a part of their advertising appropriations to put into a fund to buy something substantial for the merchant, that something represents an article of sufficient value to make it worth the grocer's while to take a real interest in pushing the goods of the manufacturers who take this means of showing their appreciation of the grocer's services. That the importance of this matter may be plain to you, figure out the following: The Knickerbocker Chocolate Co., New York, gives you a quantity of Universal coupons with their Hasty Lunch Chocolate, Bedford and Blue Ribbon Cocoa. No better goods ever came into this market. Add these coupons to the ones you get with the products of the following firms and you will find you can save enough coupons in three months to entitle you to a first-class set of harness, a platform scale or a roll-top desk. In six months you can save enough to get a good runabout, in a year a good piano:

The American Premium Co., Philadelphia; Wrigley Manufacturing Co., Philadelphia; Franklin Baker Co., Philadelphia; the Porcela Co., Philadelphia; McCanna & Fraser Co., Philadelphia; John Scott & Co., Philadelphia; Weber & Loesch, Philadelphia; Wm. Dreydoppel's Sons, Philadelphia; J. W. Beardsley's Sons, New York; Dixon Crucible Co., Jersey City; Sea Foam Baking Powder Co., New York; Flodon Manufacturing Co., Boston, Mass.; Potter & Wrightington, Boston, Mass.

Within a month a number of other big local houses will join this enterprise. Don't you think this matter is important enough for you to push the goods of these firms? Don't you think the manufacturers who have been been first to recognize the grocer's right of consideration should have the grocer's hearty co-operation?

We would be pleased to have for publication in this column the ideas of our readers upon trade topics, it being understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for any views expressed therein. All communications must be accompanied by the writer's name and address as an evidence of good faith, but not necessarily for publication. All inquiries within our power to answer will also be noticed in this department.

Feeding Molasses to Horses.

Cleveland, Ohio, Nov. 25, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have seen considerable of late regarding the use of molasses as a feed for horses. Can you give me any details of same?

Respectfully yours,
R. C. STRANGE.

Those who have tried it say that the use of low-grade molasses greatly cheapens the cost of feeding horses, while at the same time increasing their efficiency. As an illustration of the advantages of feeding molasses sprinkled on cut hay to horses working hard, the Lawrence Agricultural Company, of Louisiana, formerly had an expense of $120 per month for rolled barley; this, by the use of twelve barrels of molasses at $1.25, or $15, was reduced to less than half. The hay used was volunteer, cut in April, full of salt grease, weeds and burr clover. An experiment in feeding this weedy hay without the use of molasses was that about one-half was wasted, making it impracticable to try to use it for a working team. It had been offered for sale at $2 per ton, but was rejected.

The method of feeding is to cut it up with a hay cutter, then to sprinkle it with three quarts of molasses, diluted, over twenty pounds of hay per day, using together with the same about seven pounds of rolled barley per head per day. The result was that the horses, although continuing their hard work, not only held their own, but stood their work better than on grain and are to-day sleek and in good spirits.

To summarize: The cost of feeding twenty-three head of horses one month:—

Rolled barley, 4 tons at $30.....	$120 00
Best barley hay, 10 tons at $12.....	120 00
		$240 00
Molasses combination—
13,800 lbs. Volunteer hay at $2....	$13 80
Cost of cutting at $1.25 per ton....	10 35
12 bbls. molasses at $1.25	15 00
Two tons rolled barley at $30....	60 00
		$99 15

Thus it is seen that the expense is reduced to less than one-half, while the rolled barley still is the greatest expense item. The comparison between ten tons of best hay and less than seven tons of volunteer hay shows a discrepancy, for the reason that the volunteer hay was all eaten when treated with molasses, while even the best barley hay fed dry necessitates a great deal of waste. By the use of molasses the volunteer hay was equally as good for the purpose as it was all eaten up clean when the molasses was sprinkled over it. Later, the item of rolled barley will be further reduced and probably cut out altogether. The principal difficulty in regard to the future use of molasses as above illustrated, is that there is such a demand for it in the manufacture of vinegar and denatured alcohol that it is not available during several months of the year.

Spanish Olive Crop Promising.

The crop of Spanish queen olives is quite promising, and the appearance of manzanillas is very good—so much so that it is almost certain that three-fourths of the crop will be gathered. Prices have increased slightly on account of the healthy condition and size of this fruit. The zorzalenas, or small fruit, from which the olive oil is extracted, will probably contain very little oil, owing to dryness caused by the excessive heat and lack of water earli in the season.

Another Food Commissioner Enjoined.

The manufacturers of map syrup, both pure and mixed, wh have been for a long time waging contest with Food Commissione Bird and his associates in Michiga against the rights of mixed tab syrups, have won an importa point against the Commissioner the form of a decree from Judg Stone of the Circuit Court, r straining the Commissioner fro prosecuting the manufacturers interfering with the sale of the products as infractions of the Mic igan law. It appears that the syru in question labeled "Maple an Cane Syrup" was shipped into t State, and had been for some tim by the Pierre Viaus Maple C The Commissioner has long he that such syrup must be labele simply "Syrup" without sugges ing their ingredients. The Cou holds that a blend of maple an cane syrup is a mixture or com pound and that in the case at bar was properly labeled.

Because it slices up every little scrap in thin perfect wafers.
Because it will slice six pounds perfectly in fifteen minutes, forty slices to the inch.
Because when dull the keen razor edge is restored in a minute. Only one machine allowed in the town. Only one place to buy moist cured beef sliced to perfection. If the machine don't make good don't keep it. If your dried-beef business don't improve at once; if it don't prove the best advertisement the store ever had; if it don't save enough time and labor to pay for the machine; if the saving of small scraps, sliced up in thin salable slices, or the general satisfaction of being the only dealer in town able to sell sandwich-sliced beef that beats the world—if this is not worth three dollars a month to you, send the machine back, and stop the expense.

But as long as every machine is earning 20 to 150 dollars a month in profits—no one wishes to return one.

Send for a few sample slices and admire Libby, McNeil & Libby's best dried beef sliced as no other machine can slice it.

Dr. Wiley Now Openly Denounces Use of Sulphur in Dried Fruits and Molasses.

Issues a Statement Reporting Experiments Made in It and Says He Has Proved It Injurious. Declares That the Verdict Must Be Against Its Use in Any Food. Experiments Tried on Another Poison Squad and Drug Administered in Capsules.

The Federal Food Board has sent the "Grocery World" during the week a statement regarding the use of sulphur in molasses and dried fruits, which gives small comfort to those who hoped that the Government had decided not to interfere with this practice.

The statement is an official report by Dr. Wiley of the results of some experiments made by him with the use of sulphur in the products named. As in all of his experiments, the subjects were a class of young men, and the sulphur was administered to them in capsules, a method of administration unsparingly denounced by many of the leading chemists of the country.

The result of the experiments is summed up by Dr. Wiley in these words: "The verdict which must be pronounced in this case is decidedly unfavorable to the use of this preservative in any quantity or for any period of time."

Nothing more important has come out of the Department of Agriculture for several months, and for that reason a substantial part of the statement is reproduced:—

The relations of sulphurous acid to health are perhaps of greater importance than those of the preservatives already studied—namely, boron compounds and salicylic acid and its salts. The reason of this is found in the fact that the use of sulphurous acid at the present time is more general, and in certain classes of food products, according to the statements of manufacturers, more nearly approaches a necessity than is the case with boron or salicylic acid compounds.

Sulphurous acid in some form is extensively employed in many technical operations in the preparation of foods. This is especially true in the production of wine, in the preparation of evaporated or desiccated fruits, and in the manufacture of molasses. The problem presents itself under two aspects—namely, the use of sulphurous acid or its compounds for technical purposes in the preparation of foods and its application to the finished products as a preservative.

In the preparation of foods, sulphurous acid is chiefly employed in the form of the fumes of burning sulphur, applied either to the food products themselves in the course of manufacture or to the containers in which the food products are held.

When sulphurous acid is used as a preservative for food products after the manufacture has been completed, it is usually employed in the form of bisulphite of lime or some similar preparation. Sulphurous acid has the property of uniting with certain organic radicals, such as aldehydes and some sugars, to form compounds which are more or less stable, and in this form it is known as combined sulphurous acid. When it exists in the form of an absorbed gas or in combination with an ordinary metallic base, such as soda, potash, or lime, it is said to be in a free state. Combined sulphurous acid is set free from the organic combination by treatment with an acid with the aid of heat or with a dilute alkali in the cold.

In the accompanying report the effects of the combined sulphurous acid are not to be considered, except in so far as the combination takes place with the foods with which the sulphurous acid may be mixed after entering the stomach. The purpose of the investigation is, therefore, to determine practically the effect of free sulphurous acid—that is, sulphurous acid in a gaseous state absorbed by water or united with a base—rather than the effects of combined sulphurous acid. In no case has any question been considered in these investigations relating to the food value of the organic sulphur existing in proteids and other foods.

It is true that probably in the process of digestion complete saponification of the combined sulphur compounds takes place, so that finally they appear in the small intestines in a free state—that is, as sulphurous acid or sulphites—and are then oxidized to sulphuric acid, as is the free sulphurous acid, during the metabolic processes.

Practically, in the technical use of sulphurous acid in the manufacture of food products only the fumes of burning sulphur are employed. Desiccated fruits, pared or unpared, are subjected, after the removal of the pit or core, to the fumes of burning sulphur in what is known as a "sulphur box."

In the manufacture of syrups and molasses it is quite customary to expose the freshly expressed juices of the cane to the fumes of burning sulphur. The "sulphur box" used in this case is so constructed that the juice, falling over shelves by gravity, absorbs the fumes of the burning sulphur arising from the box, which to this extent serves as a chimney. The sulphur dioxid becomes incorporated with the components of the juice, forming more or less stable compounds which are not entirely broken up by subsequent boiling. The sulphur in this form, as well as that which may still be present in the free state—that is, either as an absorbed gas or in combination with metallic bases—passes into the finished product. When sugar is made the sulphur compounds are concentrated in the molasses and this concentration becomes greater in proportion to the number of crops of sugar crystals removed. In very low grade molasses the sulphur naturally occurs in extraordinarily large quantities.

In the preparation of evaporated apricots, peaches, pears, and mandarins sulphuring is practiced for the following reasons:—

1. To produce as clear and intense a yellow color as possible.

2. To conceal decayed portions of the fruit which have been overlooked in trimming.

3. To prevent fermentation and decay during the drying of the fruit.

4. To protect the fruit during drying from flies and other insects the larvae of which would otherwise develop after the fruit was stored.

5. To kill the cells of the fruit and thus make the texture more porous, which expedites drying.

In the application of the fumes of burning sulphur in the preparation of evaporated apples the principal object appears to be the preservation of the color of the finished product. Fruits which have been sulphured before evaporation seem to have a lighter color than those which are dried without sulphuring. At the same time it is well known that highly sulphured fruits are preserved with a lower degree of desiccation than those not sulphured, and for this reason a greater weight of of fruit is produced from a given weight of the raw material when sulphur is used. It is not difficult to preserve a water content of 30 per cent. or over in the finished product when liberal sulphuring is practiced. The use of sulphurous acid also makes it easier to protect the finished product from mold and fungous growths in general after manufacture. That excessive quantities of sulphur are not necessary for the production of evaporated fruits of pleasing appearance is well attested by analytical data obtained by the examination of fruits purchased in the open market having a light and pleasing color and at the same time containing only a small quantity of sulphurous acid. On the other hand, it is quite easy by certain forms of treatment during the process of manufacture to obtain a product in which sulphurous acid is present in excessively large quantities. The analytical data also show that a portion of the sulphurous acid used in the preparation of such products becomes oxidized into sulphuric acid after a certain time, thus artificially increasing the small amount of sulphates naturally present in some food products, which does not appear to be a desirable practice.

As sulphurous acid in some form is almost universally employed in the manufacture of wines, molasses, and syrups, and in the preparation of desiccated fruits, it is evident that the prohibition of its use would necessitate a radical change in methods of manufacture. This fact, however, it might be stated, has nothing whatever to do with the purposes of the present investigation. Assuming that in the manufacturing processes certain added bodies are used which are found on investigation to be injurious to health, the rational conclusion of such an investigation would be not to excuse or overlook the use of such bodies, but to institute investigations looking to their suppression. If, therefore, the results of the present study indicate that sulphurous acid, even in small quantities, is a deleterious substance when added to foods, it would be reasonable to expect that manufacturers, as well as investigators, would immediately take steps looking to the early suppression of the injurious substance. While it is not likely that such an event could be accomplished within a year or two, it is reasonable to suppose that it could be eventually brought about without any disturbance to manufacture and without any diminution in the output of the article.

In matters of this kind it is advisable to proceed when possible with conservative steps and to avoid any attempt at sudden and revolutionary changes in methods of manufacture. In all such cases, however, it will be found not only possible and desirable to make the food product in question without the use of the deleterious substances, but there is evidence to show that the products thus manufactured will be more palatable, more wholesome, and more valuable than those made according to the methods commonly used at present. Practical experiments have shown, for instance, the possibility of producing a high grade syrup from cane juice and other saccharine saps without the use of the fumes of burning sulphur. Analytical data show the presence on the market of considerable quantities of desiccated fruits of good appearance in which the quantity of sulphur is so small as to be ascribed rather to the conversion of the natural sulphur content of the product than to the addition of the sulphur in its manufacture.

In so far as the mere tint of the food product is concerned, it is not a difficult matter to familiarize the public with a tint of a different kind from that which would be produced by the use of sulphur. The only arguments of any force favoring the use of sulphurous acid in food products are those which relate either to the preservation of the food product or to its color. As the preservation of the product can be easily secured, and a slight change in color rendered familiar without working any hardship, these arguments seem to have no force whatever in justifying the continuation of the use of sulphurous acid in foods. It may be the part of wisdom in the administration of food laws to tolerate existing methods of manufacture for a certain length of time looking to their amelioration or change, but that is a question with which this investigation is not concerned.

There is reason to believe, therefore, as a result of the present studies, which have shown that the use of sulphurous acid in foods is deleterious, that a rapid change will be made in the processes of manufacture, looking to the complete and somewhat speedy suppression of its employment. The use of sulphurous acid and sulphites never adds anything to the flavor or quality of a food, but renders it both less palatable and less healthful. Every fact which has been brought out, therefore, in the investigation tends to accentuate the justness of the conclusion, namely, that the use of sulphurous acid in foods should be suppressed.

The experiments were conducted on twelve young men from the Department of Agriculture and a local medical school, who voluntarily assumed the obligations imposed by work of this kind. They pledged themselves to abide by the rules and regulations guiding their conduct during the period of the observation, to indulge in no unusual exercise or study, to pursue the ordinary tenor of their daily lives without any more variation than is incident to regular habits. They further undertook to eat only the food which was given them at the hygienic table, to collect and deliver for analysis the excreta of their bodies, to observe regular hours respecting sleep and work, and to report the quantity of water which was drunk away from the hygienic table. The young men were not placed under surveillance, but simply were trusted with their pledge that they would not violate any of the rules of conduct prescribed. The diet was varied so as to give a choice of meats, vegetables, fruits, and cereals, with bread, butter, milk, and coffee. Food of the best quality was purchased, free of any added preservative or coloring matter, and in a perfect state of preservation, and every precaution was used to have the food and all the appurtenances of the table perfectly sanitary.

In the form of sulphites the method of administration in capsules was practiced. This method, as in the previous investigation, was found not only to be the most convenient, but also, all things considered, the most desirable form in which to administer a substance of this kind.

Attention has been called in the previous reports to the distaste which the subject would acquire for a food product in which he knew the preservative had been mixed, and therefore less disturbance of the mental equilibrium was caused by the administration of the capsule, the envelope of which is itself a food product and would be soon dissolved in the acid digestive juices of the stomach. Moreover, in the solution of this capsule the whole of the preservative is not discharged at once into the contents of the stomach, but the capsule dissolving at different points presents gradually increasing surfaces at which solution of its contents may take place, and this, in connection with the peristaltic action of the stomach, results in a complete incorporation of the preservative with the food in the stomach in a reasonable period of time. Thus, in substances which do not possess any active escharotic action, no possible damage can be done to the walls of the stomach by this method of administration. The objections which have been made to this form of administration are undoubtedly of a merely captious character, for the purpose, if possible, of prejudicing the public against the conclusions reached. Inasmuch as the capsule is a common method of administering solid remedies at the present time the practice of the medical profession approves unanimously this method of exhibition.

These data clearly show that the administration of sulphites and of sulphurous acid in a free state in the quantities employed produces harmful effects. A tendency is manifested in practically every case to produce headache and digestive disturbances. In some cases these symptoms are not clearly marked, while in others they are extremely well defined. In many cases uneasy sensations and even pain were developed in the stomach and intestines and there were complaints of "heartburn." The occurrence of this class of symptoms during the administration of the preservative and their gradual disappearance during the after period seem to be conclusive evidence that they could have been due only to the effect of the preservative itself. There were also in some cases attacks of dizziness and palpitation of the heart. In a few cases nausea was developed to the extent of vomiting.

It was recognized, as in previous experiments, that the mental attitude of the subject might play some part in producing these symptoms, or at least might affect the description of them by the man himself. That this, however, does not exercise a dominant influence was more than established by the remarkable effects of the administration of salicylic acid, where, with the same opportunities for mental effects of a depressing character, there was manifested, on the contrary, a persistent demand for more food, the salicylic acid apparently serving as a stimulant. There is no doubt, therefore, of the fact that the symptoms which are described in the medical history are those actually experienced by the young men, any tendency to exaggeration in the reporting of these symptoms having been carefully considered at the time.

In the case ot the men who received sodium sulphite the conclusion is inevitable that the administration of this preservative in the great majority of cases causes headache, sensations of dizziness and occasional nausea, indigestion, pains in the stomach and other unfavorable symptoms. With the men who received sulphurous acid in an uncombined state, headache was very common, there was a slight tendency to dizziness, accompanied in some cases by nausea, and a feeling of exhaustion and weakness.

In general it may be said that the most prominent symptom was that of headache, which could hardly have been caused by the the imagination. This symptom was very commonly and very persistently experienced at some time during the preservative period.

The administration of the sodium sulphite was accompanied by a slight average loss of weight during the preservative period, but the full effect of the preservative in diminishing the weight of the body was shown only toward the end of the preservative period, and there was a continued loss in weight during the after period.

It appears, therefore, that the administration of sulphurous acid in the form of sulphite tends to reduce the weight of the body slowly, and that this tendency is continued for a considerable time after the withdrawal of the preservative. There was a very slight increase in the average weight of the body under the administration of the sulphurous acid in the uncombined form, which increase continued in the after period. The final average effect upon weight for the eleven men shows no change in the preservative period and a slight decrease in the after period.

The verdict which must be pronounced in this case is decidedly unfavorable to the use of this preservative in any quantity or for any period of time, and shows the desirability of avoiding the addition of any form of sulphurous acid to products intended for human food.

PHILADELPHIA GROCERY STORE AS A BARGAIN.

A veteran Philadelphia grocer, who has conducted one store 29 years, wishes to retire. The store is in good part of North Philadelphia. Size 18x30 feet. Does $300 weekly, greater part cash. Stock now $1,000, but could be reduced several hundred dollars. Uses one team. Nets a clear 10 per cent. Real estate for sale or rent. Owner will sell stock at inventory, and to sell quickly will make very low price on fixtures.

To Display Fruit

The T. & S. Fruit-Display Tree is by far the best thing on the market for showing of fruit and making it sell itself. Solid oak or cherry, revolving top, ball-bearing casters; stands 6 feet 4 inches high.

Dealers have told us this fixture sold 25 to 50 per cent. more bananas for them.

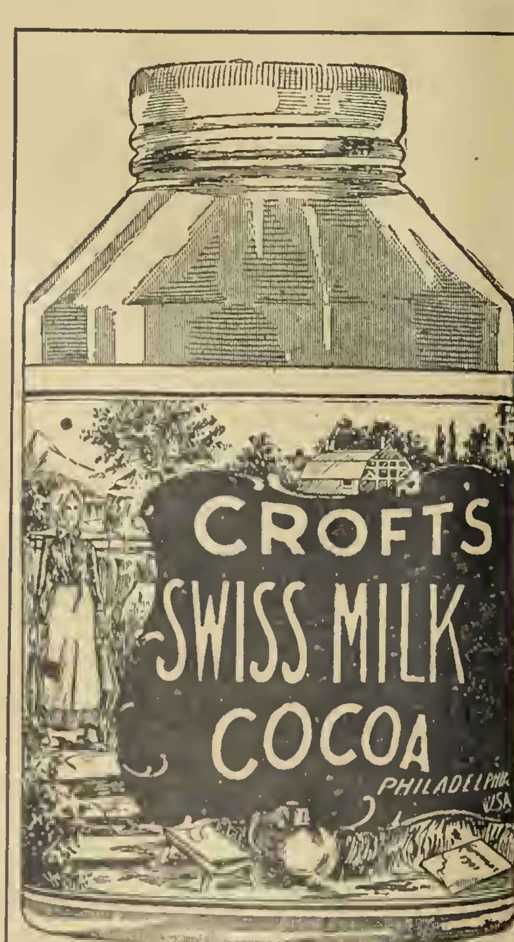
Bought Simply Because She Liked the Glass Package



It's odd what little things make sales sometimes. A grocer told us the other day that the day before a woman had bought a jar of Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa simply because she liked the novelty of the glass package. She didn't ask any questions about the peculiar characteristics of the cocoa; she liked the glass jar and bought.

There is a point in that for grocers who study the public—the useful novelty is usually the seller.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa, the only cocoa packed in glass, has a smoother flavor than any other cocoa made. That is because our exclusive process of making takes out certain substances that other manufacturers leave in.

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

Be Proud of Your Olive Oil

You may remember the recent tests which the United States Government made into all brands of imported olive oil.

Those tests (Government Bulletin 77, page 55) proved Nicelle Olive Oil to be superior to all the other brands tested. Nicelle Oil is made and bottled in Nice, France. It is the highest type of pure olive oil producible.

Sell olive oil you can be proud of. There are so many brands you can't.

What It Does To Turkey Filling

FOUNDED 1815

Stickney & Poor's Poultry Seasoning produces such deliciousness of flavor that it gives dignity to dishes that would otherwise be insignificant.

Take the bread filling of a turkey, season that with a little Poultry Seasoning, and it becomes good enough to eat for itself; and when this superbly spicy flavor is diffused throughout the meat of the fowl by the process of cooking, the result is 100 per cent. better than any home-made seasoning can give.

So many thousand consumers believe this, and, believing it, have bought Stickney & Poor's Poultry Seasoning for years that we are sure your customers will feel and do the same.

STICKNEY & POOR SPICE COMPANY, Boston, Mass.

Old Fashioned Gelatine

The cleanest gelatine in the world now comes to you, Mr. Grocer, packed with Universal Coupons.

For purity of stock and scrupulous cleanliness of manipulation Chalmers' Gelatine has no equal anywhere.

Nothing but the finest calves' stock and the clearest spring water. The result is real rich old-fashioned gelatine, as far removed from the nauseous imitations of it as wheat is removed from chaff.

The average consumer has been fed on imitation gelatine so long that he will turn with immense relief to Chalmers'—if you'll let him.

Two styles—granulated and shredded.

They Wouldn't Imitate It If It Wasn't So Good

The Ramly Cigarette is the finest 10c. Turkish cigarette ever made. It is so good other manufacturers try to make their goods look like the Ramly, but there the similarity ends.

If you want to get a run on cigarettes, get people to go out of their way to come to you, put in the Ramly. Remember how it is spelled—R-A-M-L-Y.

Read the Point In Large Type

Here's the proposition of James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet in a nutshell:—

1. It is the cleanest rennet made.
2. It coagulates milk in 2 to 5 minutes.
3. It will not spoil.
4. Every bottle is guaranteed.
5. Jobbers everywhere indorse it.

And last, but not least—this is in large type because it's a large point—it pays 100 per cent. profit. Costs $1.50, sells for $3.00.

When You're in the Market Again

Most future canned goods have been delivered, and you may not need any more goods for several months.

But when you do, wouldn't it be a good idea to buy some Blue Bell or Clover Farm, simply to see what they're like. If they're as good as we say, you will then probably want to buy futures of these brands next year.

They come to you backed with a contract to deliver full 100 per cent. That's the only business-like contract to make.

Seven Out of Ten Repeats

We have found that seven out of every ten people who once eat Hoffman House pickles will call for them again. Our new process of pickling by which they are prepared gives them something that no other pickle has—a delicious appetizing quality that doesn't burn like other pickles and never palls. You can test this "repeat" quality at very slight expense, and if Hoffman House pickles will make the hit for you they have made for others you will be mighty glad you made the experiment.

Packed in tins, enameled inside.

Packed by THE J. WELLER CO., Cincinnati, Ohio

We know the butter market, being manufacturers and wholesale dealers of some years' experience, and when we say that our GURNSE is the best print butter on the market, we are telling something that we know to be a fact.

It simply must be the best, for it is tested and inspected and inspected and tested until nothing but the very fanciest butter can possibly pass.

Packed in brine-dipped paper, and warranted the finest creamery butter possible to produce. You have long been after butter that would run regular — here's your opportunity.

Paste This in Your Hat

You must sell package coffee, for many of your customers won't have it loose on account of the things that get in it, and because of the loss of the aroma.

You can't sell as good a coffee as Ariosa at the same price, because there isn't any.

You don't have to sell Ariosa, we have done that for you—simply hand it out.

You make only your profit on other package coffees and you are not sure to please your trade. Ariosa pleases everybody who buys it and besides your profit you get vouchers with every case--vouchers which we will exchange for almost anything money will buy.

Ham Confidence

There is a vast difference between merely "ham" and Swift's PREMIUM Ham.

The grocer who just keeps "ham," who buys no special brand, and buys from no particular packer, is just as certain to have a small and irregular ham trade as night is certain to follow day.

But the grocer who sells only Swift's PREMIUM ham, which is always the same and always fine, will have a ham trade that amounts to something. His trade won't care to experiment with other grocers; they're getting what they want and they're getting it all the time.

PREMIUM Hams are tender, delicious and—this is important—well advertised.

How to Answer Their Questions

Put a box of I-V Washing Tablets on your counter. They will be such a novelty that every woman who comes in will ask what they are and what they will do. Tell them this:—

1—They contain no acid of any sort.
2—They wash clothes without rubbing.
3—They make clothes beautifully white;
4—They can be used in hard water;
5—They take stains from table linen without any rubbing whatever.

Any one of these points would sell a package—just see the women's eyes glisten when you name them all.

WALKER STORE FIXTURES

—Attract Good Trade—

There is so much to be said to the merchant about to buy new fixtures that we prefer to send our catalogue, which will set him wise on many points that he should know. Our designs and our workmanship are unsurpassed. Our customers write that they are more than pleased with the appearance of their stores.

WE KNOW HOW TO DESIGN ARTISTIC INTERIORS

We are ready at all times to offer suggestions covering any detail. And our catalogue is sufficiently explicit to make it both interesting and instructive. Send for it.

Don't Buy a Cheap Wagon

If you do, you'll remember this advice. A cheap wagon looks nearly as well in the factory as our "J. M.," but oh, what a difference in six months!

The "J. M." wagon is the best delivery wagon made. Only the finest materials go into it, and they're put together right, too.

If we haven't what you want, though we probably have, we'll build it for you.

If 1000 Retailers in Philadelphia Recommended Us, Would YOU Believe in Us?

One of the hardest propositions which confront the retailer is to turn their bad debts into cash. Lots of them have tried different collection agencies, paid retaining or subscription fees and got no results; so it is hard to convince them that any one can help to bring the beats to book.

We show you how to collect your own accounts; nobody handles your money but you. We can give you the names of a thousand merchants in Philadelphia whom we have shown how to get money due them which had been charged off long before they heard of us.

It costs you nothing to find out what our plan is—can you afford not to?

United States Attorney-General Says Whole Chain of Guarantees Are Good

In an Opinion to Federal Food Board He Overturns Another of the Board's Unwarranted Attitudes. Where Unbroken Package Passes Through Many Successive Persons' Hands, Each Person Goes Free Who Can Show Guarantee From His Seller. Department's Ruling Was That Only One Guarantee Could Be Accepted. Meat of the Opinion.

During the past week the Attorney-General of the United States, Charles J. Bonaparte, Esq., has handed down an opinion, copy of which has been sent the "Grocery World," which overturns the Federal Food Board in another of its unwarranted attitudes toward the enforcement of the Federal food law.

The opinion decides that where an unbroken package of a food product passes through many hands in the regular course of business, each person through whose hands it passes is immune from prosecution if he can show a guarantee signed by the person selling it to him. In this way the liability would be traced rapidly back through the chain until it reached the original guarantor, usually the manufacturer, who would then be prosecuted.

The Federal Food Board, several months ago, decided that if adulterated goods were found in the hands of A, A would go free if he held a guarantee signed by B, who sold him the goods, but that B would not be freed from liability, even though he held the same guarantee signed by C. At that time the writer addressed a communication to the Board, setting forth that this course was highly inequitable, as the intent of the law was to fix liability on the real offender, who in nearly all cases was the manufacturer, and that therefore any number of successive guarantees should be accepted, provided they led directly back to the real perpetrator of the wrong. The reply was that the board believed it had no authority to do this. The Attorney-General now seems to think differently. The salient portions of his opinions are as follows:—

Sir:—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture, September 10, in which he requests my opinion upon a question which has has arisen in his department in the administration of the Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, in a class of cases of which the following is a type:—

An examination having been made in the Bureau of Chemistry, in accordance with Section 4 of the Act, of a sample of food purchased from a retail dealer in the District of Columbia, and the food having been found to be adulterated, the dealer was cited for a hearing, and, having appeared, established as a defense under which he claimed protection a written guaranty, conforming to the requirements of Section 9 of the act from a Maryland wholesaler who had sold him the food and shipped it to him in the District of Columbia in the exact condition in which he sold it here.

The Maryland wholesaler, having been then cited, in turn appeared and established a similar guaranty, under which he also claimed protection, from a Pennsylvania manufacturer who had sold him the food and had shipped it to him in Maryland in the exact condition in which he had, in turn, guaranteed it and shipped it to the retailer in the District of Columbia.

The question upon which my opinion is requested is whether, upon such state of facts, the Maryland wholesaler is amenable to prosecution for violation of the Act or is protected by the guaranty from the Pennsylvania manufacturer.

By Section 2 of the Food and Drugs Act (34 Stat., 768) it is made a misdemeanor, inter alia, to ship any adulterated or misbranded food or drugs in interstate commerce, or to receive the same in such commerce, and, having so received, to deliver the same to any other person in original, unbroken packages, or to sell the same in the District of Columbia.

Section 9 of the act further provides:—

That no dealer shall be prosecuted under the provisions of this Act when he can establish a guaranty signed by the wholesaler, jobber, manufacturer, or other party residing in the United States, from whom he purchases such articles, to the effect that the same is not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of this act, designating it. Said guaranty, to afford protection, shall contain the name and address of the party or parties making the sale of such articles to such dealer, and in such case said party or parties shall be amenable to the prosecutions, fines, and other penalties which would attach, in due course, to the dealer under the provisions of this act.

After careful consideration of this Act, together with the memoranda prepared by the members of the Board of Food and Drug Inspection, which you have submitted with your letter, I am of the opinion that the guaranty from the Pennsylvania manufacturer affords complete protection to the Maryland wholesaler and that he is hence not amenable to prosecution under the act on account either of the interstate sale and shipment made by him to the retailer in the District of Columbia or of the guaranty given by him in connection therewith.

1. It is clear that the Maryland wholesaler is protected from prosecution for the interstate sale and shipment made by him, by the explicit provision of Section 9, that "no dealer shall be prosecuted under the provisions of this act when he can establish a guaranty signed by the wholesaler, jobber, manufacturer, or other party residing in the United States, from whom he purchases such articles, to the effect that the same is not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the act."

The broad term "dealer" which is used in this section, not being restricted in its meaning by any other provision of the act, includes those who deal at wholesale as well as those who deal at retail. I am of the opinion, therefore, that under the plain language of this provision any dealer, whether a wholesaler or retailer, who would otherwise be amenable to prosecution for dealing in an adulterated or misbranded article in violation of the act, is protected from prosecution on such account by establishing a guaranty in conformity with the requirements of the act, signed by a resident of the United States from whom he purchased such article.

2. A more difficult question, however, arises in reference to the liability of the Maryland wholesaler to prosecution by reason of the guaranty which he gave the District of Columbia retailer in connection with the sale and shipment to him.

It is expressly provided by Section 9 of the act that wherever a dealer who would otherwise be subject to presecution establishes a guaranty from a resident of the United States who sold him the articles, the dealer is thereby protected and such guarantor "shall be amenable to the prosecutions, fines, and other penalties which would attach, in due course, to the dealer under the provisions of this act." Construing this section in its entirety, I am of the opinion that its purpose was to create, in addition to the offense of manufacturing and dealing in adulterated and misbranded food and drugs, specifically made misdemeanors by Sections 1 and 2 of the act, the distinct and substantive offense of guaranteeing, under the Food and Drugs Act, any adulterated or misbranded article—thereby enabling the purchaser to deal with such articles in a manner otherwise forbidden without being amenable to the punishment to which he would otherwise be subject—the offense of giving such false guaranty, however, not to be complete until the purchaser deals with the article thus guaranteed in a manner otherwise punishable by the act, in which event the guarantor would become subject to the same punishment for giving the false guaranty as that to which the purchaser would otherwise be amenable by reason for his dealing with the article.

Without discussing the scope and effect of this provision, I am of the opinion that whatever this may be, the maker of a false guaranty is just as much protected from any prosecution to which he might be liable on this account by establishing a former guaranty from the person from whom he purchased the article as he is thereby protected from prosecution for dealing with the article in a manner otherwise forbidden by the act; in other words, that the former guaranty is a complete protection against any prosecution under this act.

It is true that Section 9 does not specifically state that the first guaranty shall protect the second guarantor, but this result follows from the broad provision that "no dealer shall be prosecuted under the provisions of this act when he can establish a guaranty signed by the * * * party * * * from whom he purchases such articles." As a prosecution for the false guaranty would be a prosecution "under the provisions" of the act, and as the dealer's protection under his vendor's guaranty is not limited by the act to prosecutions for dealing in the articles, but includes all prosecutions under its provisions, a former guaranty would in my poinion afford a dealer protection against the punishment to which he might otherwise be amenable for his own false guaranty as well as for selling or shipping the articles in violation of the act.

In short, the intention of Congress appears to have been to relieve from liability any person who would otherwise be subject to any prosecution under the act if he establishes a guaranty from the person who sold him the goods, provided such person is a resident of the United States and therefore himself within the reach of prosecution, and to make such original guarantor subject to prosecution in lieu of the subsequent offender, Congress evidently intending to refer back liability in such case, in general, to the original guarantor, who, of course, in the case of goods of domestic production, would usually be the manufacturer, who would know their real character, and, in the case of goods imported from a foreign country, would be the importer, who would assume responsibility therefor, and to make the liability to punishment fall upon such original guarantor so far as possible.

Any other construction of this act would work great hardship upon an innocent intermediary, who, relying upon the guaranty which he receives from the original manufacturer of an article, sells it in interstate trade and guarantees it in his turn. And if the original guaranty does not fully protect him in such case, it would become exceedingly hazardous to sell and guarantee such article, even though guaranteed by the manufacturer, without first making, on his own account, a detailed investigation, chemical or otherwise, to ascertain whether it is in fact adulterated or misbranded. Manifestly, however, such a requirement would in many cases seriously impede and obstruct interstate trade.

It is stated in Doctor Dunlap's memorandum that, from the conditions that the Board of Food and Drug Inspection has found to exist throughout the whole business community, dealers engaged in interstate trade are insisting on a guaranty from the seller and purchasing only under such guaranty; that in order to do an interstate business to-day a dealer must give a guaranty with the goods he sells, whether he be the actual manufacturer or not; and that if the dealer cannot rely upon the manufacturer's guaranty as a protection, it must have the effect of preventing interstate sales on the part of small concerns, and even of large concerns who probably would not care to incur the added expense and trouble, in many cases prohibitive, of having the goods carefully analyzed in order to be fully acquainted with their character.

There is, however, a presumption against a construction of a statute which "would cause grave public injury or even inconvenience" (Bird vs. United States, 187 U. S., 118, 124). And it was said by Lord Coke, in language which was quoted by Abbott, C. J., in Margate Pier Co. vs. Hannam, 3 B. and Ald., 266, 270, and cited with approval in Holy Trinity Church vs. United States, 143 U. S., 457, 459, that: "Acts of Parliament are to be so construed as no man that is innocent or free from injury or wrong be, by a literal construction, punished or endamaged."

The construction which I have given the act is furthermore supported by the view expressed in Greeley's Food and Drugs Act, Sec. 65, p. 4, that:—

A wholesaler or jobber who purchases food or drug products from the producer or from anyone else may safely guarantee the goods so purchased to his consumers, provided he has from the producer or other person from whom he purchased the goods a guaranty covering them.

For these reasons, I am of the opinion that in the case stated the Maryland wholesaler is not amenable to prosecution under the act but is completely protected by his guaranty from the Pennsylvania manufacturer.

3. I should add however, that the fact that both the District of Columbia retailer and the Maryland wholesaler are protected from prosecution by the guaranties which they have established from their respective vendors, does not, in my opinion, exempt the adulterated food from confiscation under Section 10 of the act, which provides, inter alia, that any adulterated or misbranded food or drug which is being transported in interstate commerce for sale, or having been transported, remains unloaded, unsold, or in original, unbroken packages, or is sold or offered for sale in the District of Columbia, may be proceeded against in the district where found "and seized for confiscation by a process of libel for condemnation." The provision of Section 9 that no dealer shall be prosecuted when he establishes a guaranty from his vendor merely affords protection, in my opinion, against the criminal prosecution, fines, and other penalties to which the dealer would otherwise be personally amenable, and does not in any way affect the liability of the merchandise to confiscation under the provisions of Section 10.

Havemeyer Dead.

Henry O. Havemeyer, president of the American Sugar Refining Co., died at 3 P. M. on Wednesday last at his country home, Merrivale Stock Farm, at Commack, L. I. Mr. Havemeyer's death resulted from an attack of acute indigestion with which he was seized on Thanksgiving Day. He was taken critically ill following a walk he took after dinner on the holiday. Mr. Havemeyer was born in 1847. His father and grandfather had amassed fortunes in the sugar business, which had been carried on in old Greenwich village, and he entered the business as a matter of course. He was possessed of most remarkable executive ability and initiated and carried to a successful conclusion many of the coup de graces which the Sugar Trust made during his connection with it.

Tomato Pack 11,000,000 Cases?

If So, Market May Look Weak. Large Percentage of Pack Seems Below Grade.

As the time approaches for the making known, as near as it can be made known, which is not very near, of the national tomato pack, it seems to be generally expected by everybody that the figures will show very nearly, if not quite, the largest pack on record. Most expectations seem to hover around 11,000,000 cases.

It is known that the entire Eastern pack has been very heavy. The West fell down to some extent with the exception of California, which has become somewhat of a factor in the canned tomato business and which has had a large production this year. The pack in 1906 was somewhat less than 10,000,000 cases, which means that there is no carry-over this year. The new pack comes on a bare market, but for one reason particularly it is apt to be much more than is required. The one reason is, that a good part of the receipts of new pack goods, which have been made up to the present time, show a rather poor quality, due, no doubt, to bad growing weather during the latter part of the packing season. Naturally there are some good tomatoes packed, since the weather was not at all times unfavorable, but the finer grades have not apparently shown themselves in the market as yet.

If it is true, as seems to be believed, that the pack is as large as the figures above given, and if so much of it as is expected is of poor quality, a soft future can be predicted for the tomato market during the coming winter, particularly if the financial weakness continues. At the present writing the market is just where it has been for the last two or three weeks, but is liable to go lower the very minute there is any pressure to sell.

Wholesale Grocer's Side of Specialty Order Question

Philadelphia Jobber Says Jobbing Trade Have Grown Suspicious of Specialty Orders Because So Many Have Been Fraudulent. Never Signed by the Retailer. Unfulfilled Promises by Salesmen.

As a wholesale grocer, I have been extremely interested in reading the article in your last issue on the organization of the varions manufacturers' representatives in this territory into an association.

I note that their intention is to secure more consideration from the jobber for orders secured by the specialty salesmen and turned into the various wholesale houses to fill. They may have some success, and I trust they will where success is deserved. Their success will be hindered, however, by the fact that a good many wholesale grocers place no dependence whatever in the orders that come into them from specialty salesmen, not because the retailer might refuse to take the goods through obstinacy, but because there is very frequently something fraudulent or insincere about the order. Where this is the case often even a suggestion on our part that retailers should take the goods causes a discussion, which in our case at least has often well-nigh lost us customers. Where we accept the retailer's statement that the order was not bona fide, it involves us into carting the goods back, frequently at our own expense.

If I simply had the profit on orders of this sort that have been turned into this one house in the last five years, which upon investigation have been found never to have been signed by the retailer at all, I would own at the present time a very comfortable sum of money. I don't mean that all of them were actually forged, but some of them were even forged. In most cases the salesman would claim that he had received some kind of authority from the retailer to sign for him, the retailer would deny this authority, and there was the squabble already formed.

A case of this sort happened in southern New Jersey only a short time ago. A salesman for a specialty soap house called on one of our customers down there and endeavored to get an order for soap. The retailer's wife takes an active interest in the business and she remembers hearing some discussion between her husband and the salesman over the proposition. While still discussing her husband left the store to take a train—the salesman with him. A few minutes after the salesman came in and said: "Your husband after all forgot to sign this order." The lady, believing of course from this that the omission to sign had simply been an oversight signed her own name, which was as good as her husband's, since she did a considerable part of the light buying. Further, let me say that the order was for a particularly large amount of soap.

Hams That Always Sell

There is another sort of ham much less preferred to the absolutely unidentified and unbranded ham, and that is the ham of the packer who gets good raw material to-day and poor to-morrow.

Both of these kill the grocers' trade, because they are so irregular. They please his customers to-day and provoke them to-morrow. No trade can last long under hot and cold applications.

Swift's PREMIUM Hams are always regular. We have the pick of the hogs of the whole country and hence we can keep the quality even the whole year through. Swift's PREMIUM Hams hold and increase trade.

he retailer refused to pay for it, on he ground that he had not signed t and had not authorized anybody o sign it for him. The signature of his wife was shown to him and when she explained her connection with it it was simply shown that he salesman had been tricky with both. That order involved us in a very disagreeable fracas with a good customer and deepened our conviction that orders taken by specialty salesmen, while not necessarily bad, might still be so.

The theory of the manufacturers' agent that we as jobbers should insist that the retailers take these orders when they are admitted to be perfectly straight and properly signed, but where the retailer simply refuses to take the goods, amused me very much. Only this morning an order for a case of Lipton's tea, which had been taken by a specialty salesman and turned in to us, was turned down by the retailer who had given it. He is our customer, a very good man, and he gave no reason whatever for refusing the order, except that he did not want he goods. While every man should stand behind the contract to which he puts his name, and while this particular grocer has not a leg to stand on in refusing to take the tea in question, nevertheless, as a matter of dollars and cents, it would be the poorest investment we could make to attempt to force him in any way whatever.

In my experience more of these specialty contracts are turned down because of unfulfilled promises made at the time they were given by the salesmen than for any other reason. These salesmen are extremely anxious to get orders. They say to retailers that if you will sign this contract we will do so and so, so and so and so and so, and relying upon their promises the retailers sign their contracts and they are then turned into the jobbers to bill and the jobbers fill them. The retailers refuse to take the goods, because the so and so, so and so and so and so that the salesmen agreed to perform has not been done. This is the main reason for the custom of most jobbers in handling these orders to which the manufacturers' agents seem to object, and that is, refusing to fill them at all, except after confirmation by the house's own salesmen. This, the agents say, delays the matter very greatly and gives the retailer an additional chance to get out of his bargain. They want the orders passed immediately and sent out the same day or the next day, so that the iron will be struck while hot.

In my judgment, no jobber will ever agree to any such plan. The fact that we can never know anything about the order at all except the meagre details which appear upon the face, seems to me to be an unquestionable reason for finding out through our own salesmen whether what appears upon the face is everything important connected with the order. Undoubtedly this involves delay, but because of the fact that specialty salesmen themselves have turned in such a vast amount of crooked and unreliable orders, the jobbers have simply been compelled to take measures to keep themselves protected.

Just one other point: I have found some of the specialty salesmen, or the manufacturers' agents who employ them, particularly unreasonable in the matter of credits. Naturally no jobber will fill the order of a retailer whose credit is unsatisfactory, and it is quite obvious that the judge as to whether it is satisfactory must be the jobber himself and not the specialty man. The manufacturers' agents complain very bitterly at times to me because we have turned down a retailer whose credit was entirely satisfactory to him, as if his opinion had any weight whatever as to who we should take on our books as customers.

Suit Against the Sugar Trust.

The efforts of the Philadelphia coterie of bankers representing the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Co., of Philadelphia, to bring to account the Sugar Trust for the alleged exercise of improper control over the Pennsylvania refinery in keeping it closed and the effect of its competition therefore avoided, has been a most lamentable fiasco up to date. Both of the two steps which the Pennsylvania concern has so far taken have been decided in favor of the Trust, and now the action seems to have been abandoned entirely.

The first of the two steps which the Trust won was the effort made by the Pennsylvania Co., plaintiffs, to secure permission to examine the Trust's books. The court decided that there was no legal authority for any such examination. The second step was in the actual trial of the case, when the plaintiffs made a motion to amend the complaint. It was denied by the court and the Pennsylvania Co. then permitted the case to go by default, which means that it must now begin, if begun at all, all over again.

The humorous feature of both of these failures is that each has been loudly clamored by the plaintiff to be a victory for itself. Its attorneys expected the thing to go exactly the way it did, according to their story, and by its going that way they are advanced rather than retarded. This, of course, is mere bluff. No litigant is retarded by letting his case go by default after failure to obtain permission to amend his statement of claim. The "Grocery World" will be much surprised if this much advertised lawsuit ever amounts to anything

Cutting Oranges Green.

During the last few weeks, in fact ever since the Florida orange season opened, the strange shortsightedness of many, in fact most, of the growers has had another exhibition in the wholesale markets of Philadelphia.

Not since shipments of Florida oranges begun this season have 10 per cent. of the retail grocers of the North had a thoroughly ripe orange in their stores. The fruit has mostly been such as the native Floridian would refuse to eat. Picked stark green and rushed North to get the Northern money, the fruit has ripened slowly and irregularly, being usually put on sale bruised with green blotches of an exceedingly unsavory appearance. The flavor of such oranges bears no resemblance whatever to that of a properly ripened Florida orange. And that the public recognizes the difference is seen from the fact that oranges of the latter class are now eagerly wanted at $4 per box, while the green kind find it quite difficult to get from $2 to $3.

In other words, the shrewd foresight of the green orange picker has had the extremely satisfactory result of cutting his prices from $1 to $2 per box for his fruit.

"Attacking" Oleo.

The following is taken bodily from a contemporary:—

> Food Commissioner Barnard, of Indiana, is the latest champion of the rights of oleomargarine, and believes that when butter has been soaring to the figures it has during the past few months the time has come for the State Legislatures and Congress to break the shackles which have bound the product down with a popular prejudice it does not deserve.
> Speaking of its production, Mr. Barnard said in a recent interview that if one would only ask for it he could get something every bit as palatable as butter, much purer and at half the price.

Of course, Commissioner Barnard may not have said any such thing, or if he did say it, may have qualified it in any one of a score of ways.

Don't send in any more money for the Sprague-Warner Window Dressing Books; they're gone.

The oleo men, in all the articles they inspire or write, have a crafty way of putting people in the position of attacking or defending—oleo. As a matter of fact oleo has probably not been attacked once since its manufacture began. The whole oleo war has waged, not over whether oleo was an edible product, because all concede that it is, but over whether it shall be sold honestly. And the sale of the product stands everywhere restricted to-day, not because of the least suspicion of its perfect purity and wholesomeness, but wholly because those who handle it have proved themselves temperamentally unable to sell it squarely.

The Coward in Business.

Here is a piece of fine writing, which probably flowed easily from the pen of its writer, the editor of the Oregon "Tradesman":—

> The coward has no peace of mind. He is eternally frightened about something. His existence is one continual round of scares. This thought came up irresistibly when we see business men cutting down on their advertising expenses when a little flurry of depression appears. They say there is nothing so timid as money. We will back money any day for boldness against the faint-hearted man of affairs who begins to scrouge down in his corner and scream at the first sign of trouble. The spectre of hard times will not down for a call for money. The only way to down him is to use the exorcism of courage.

It is easy for any newspaper man, whose enterprises as a rule are far less intimately affected by business calamities than businesses themselves, to prate about the cowards of mercantile life. Undoubtedly there are cowards in business and undoubtedly their presence there is at least in part responsible for the continuation, if not the inception, of most business calamities. But when one thinks of it, there is considerable justification, or at least explanation, for cowards in business.

Familiar to every business man of the present generation are many instances of businesses which have succumbed utterly, not to any tangible condition, but to simple fear. Left to themselves, they would not have succumbed. The fear that flows like a lightning flash throug the business community at the fir intimation of financial crisis is ca culated to strike terror to the hea of every man who is in any wa heavily involved, as nearly all of th large business men are. In ever large city there are hundreds o business men who even in the mo prosperous times, if all of the creditors were to make demand upon them at one time, would fai Yet those men are perfectly soli and unless the conditions surround ing them become acute and extra ordinary they will never be in th slightest danger. It is men like th who are usually called cowards, an who possibly are, but if they ar they have a great deal more caus for being than small business me and certainly far more than the me who are not in mercantile busines at all.

John Wanamaker's Failure Announced.

The following announcement o the failure of John Wanamaker f $11,000,000, clippe from the "Wisco sin and Northwe Trade Journal will be highly interesting to its sub ject, Mr. Wanamaker, to whom with the rest of the people of th East, it will be news.

Our esteemed contemporary ha indeed secured a notable beat. I some way it has ferreted out on of the most colossal failures, if it story is true, that the country ha known for years, concerning whic not a breath of which has appeare in any Eastern publication. Th article very well illustrates the ad age that to learn the news one mus go away from home:—

> The failure of John Wanamaker, the Philadelphia millionaire dry-goods merchant, for $11,000,000 is said to be due to the sapping of his regular business to supply the necessary funds for his building operations which he was carrying on at enormous outlay. The failure affects his entire business, including both the great Philadelphia and New York department stores.
> Some years ago, when Wanamaker took over the famous Hilton store (formerly A. T. Stewart's) many thought that he was assuming a heavy burden, viewed in the light of the Hilton experience, but he made the store a success from the start, although it was far down town, and away from the centre of the shopping district.

His failure at this time, through outside investments, after many years of successful business, is but another illustration of the old adage that "The shoemaker should stick to his last."

The "Grocery World" knows nothing whatever of John Wanamaker's condition. At all times, for the past fifteen years, and particularly since he began huge business operations both in Philadelphia and New York, there have been rumors of a coming financial catastrophe. There has been no catastrophe, however, and the "Grocery World" firmly believes there will be none unless Mr. Wanamaker's affairs get very far beyond the danger point. When a man conducts the two enormous department store businesses which Mr. Wanamaker conducts he must necessarily and continuously owe his creditors many hundreds of thousands of dollars. The creditors, therefore, have so much at stake that they are simply compelled to advance more, and a good deal more, if necessary, in order to save what is already at risk.

The Coming Conflict.

All indications point to the early coming of a conflict over the question whether certain large co-operative exchanges, chain store concerns and large single retail establishments, shall continue to buy goods direct from the manufacturers, or whether at the behest of the wholesale grocery interests they shall all be cut off the direct list and be compelled to go humbly to some jobber for their goods.

In Pennsylvania a lame effort is being made to force this issue by a somnolent Western gentleman named Greaves. Mr. Greaves accepts a large salary from the Wholesale Grocers' Association of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, for having on several occasions divided the jobbers of this section into two not overly friendly camps, and for having in his own right to compel manufacturers to sell only the strict jobber accomplished absolutely nothing up to date.

Mr. Greaves has gone about building his wall in several different ways: by getting jobbers to sign petitions to various manufacturers praying that such and such a concern be cut off; by verbal talks with manufacturers, and by threatening their representatives. But in not single case has he convinced a manufacturer that a jobber was entitled to protection simply because he was a jobber.

And he probably never will, for all modern logic is against him. There is to-day but one rational standard for the wholesale or jobbing sale of merchandise. Anybody able to buy more than a certain fixed quantity, regardless of the character of his business, should be permitted to buy of the manufacturer direct. If he cannot buy such a quantity, he should buy of the jobber, even if he himself is a jobber.

To say that an infinitesimal jobber buying five cases may buy of the manufacturer, while a retailers' co-operative buying concern buying one hundred cases may not, is to state a proposition which answers itself.

Another Cigarette Law Thrown Over.

The anti-cigarette law in the State of Washington has been declared unconstitutional by Judge E. H. Sullivan, in the Superior Court of Spokane, on the ground that the title did not conform to the body of the act. The law in question entirely banished the cigarette from Washington, and dealers who formerly found cigarettes a profitable source of income are preparing to resume their sale.

How to Get a Roll Top Desk Free.

The Knickerbocker Chocolate Co., of New York, have made an arrangement with the Manufacturers' Trade-Mark Association, the big premium clearing-house of New York, which enables them to substantially reward retailers who show an interest in increasing the sale of Barker's Hasty Lunch Chocolate, Bedford and Blue Ribbon Cocoas.

These goods are so fine that it is hard to sell anything else to consumers once they have had them; so besides the reward the Knickerbocker Chocolate Co. give grocers for pushing them, they are certain to please their trade.

Suppose, for example, a grocer needs a new roll-top desk, a safe, a cheese cutter, a computing or platform scale; instead of drawing on his bank account to pay for them he pushes the sale of the Knickerbocker Co.'s goods with his customers, saves the Universal Coupons packed in every case for him and adds them to those coming to him from other manufacturers, and in a short time he will have collected enough to entitle him to any of the articles named.

The Manufacturers' Trade-Mark Association issue a handsome illustrated catalogue which they send free to grocers, showing an almost unlimited array of useful articles of merchandise which they will send grocers in exchange for the Universal Coupons, together with a list of all the manufacturers throughout the country who give these same coupons to the grocers.

The Knickerbocker Co. is the only manufacturer of chocolate and cocoa from whom a grocer can get these Universal Coupons; so grocers who want valuable free merchandise as well as their regular profits will concentrate their efforts on the sale of the Knickerbocker Chocolate Co.'s goods.

Workings of the Horse Insurance Department of the New York Association. Brooklyn Grocers Hard Hit By the Money Troubles. Brooklyn Association Will Support Hearn, Department Storekeeper, Who Sells No Groceries. Unique Argument Over Sago. General News of the Trade.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, Dec. 6, 1907.

All the officers of the New York Retail Grocers' Union were re-elected at the annual election which took place Monday, this being due to the general satisfaction with the administration of the year that is closing. Three of the trustees whose terms expired with this year were re-elected for three years more and the other trustees hold over.

The officers and trustees who were re-elected and who will be formally installed for the new term at a smoker early in January are: President, Fred. Ottén; first vice-president, George Stadtlander; second vice-president, John Steeneck; recording secretary, H. C. Kloefkorn; financial secretary, H. Droge; treasurer, G. H. Overbeck; trustees, H. H. Becker, G. H. Tiemeyer, H. F. Meyer.

The subject of horse insurance came up, one of the oldest members commenting on the fact that the association at present has not a salaried veterinary surgeon in its employ for the purpose of examining the horses. In reply, it was said that last summer there was something in the nature of an epidemic among the horses, with the result that the calls upon the fund had been unusually heavy, and this has led to some economy in administration. It was also pointed out that some prominent members, including the critic, did not insure their horses with the society's department, and this had a tendency to weaken it. The critic called for an application blank and at once placed his request for insurance on all his horses, at the same time admitting that the joke was on him. It is expected that the discussion of the subject will also lead other members to take advantage of the benefits offered by the insurance department.

Some of the Brooklyn grocers have been relating experiences with some bank officials and others who have been regarded as men of the best credit, and who of late have been placing orders and opening accounts in stores where they and their families had not before traded —sometimes in localities distant from their residences. The dealers feel that even in the case of these eminent citizens some care must now be exercised, lest the transfer of trade may be due to the fact that credit in the old stores has been exhausted. There have been some kaleidoscopic changes among men of supposed wealth in that borough.

Brooklyn was hit pretty hard in the banking trouble, a half dozen of the banks, in all of which grocers had accounts, being in trouble. Before the first of these banks closed its doors the papers of that borough contained daily columns telling of the conservative spirit of the Brooklyn banks and assuring everybody that the speculations causing excitement in Manhattan could not possibly affect the old and sound institutions across the East River. Then came the crash, with two chains of banks going into receivers' hands, the suicide of one of the bank presidents, the arrest of bank officials and the exposure of forgeries and various kinds of theft, so that Brooklyn could hang its head in shame in comparison with Manhattan.

The grocers whose moneys are tied up in the closed institutions are watching with interest the developments and are hopeful of ultimately getting, if not all their money, at least a large part of it. There is also some consolation in the fact that the bank officers will have to answer in court for any misdeeds.

The United Retail Grocers' Association of Brooklyn adopted a resolution, at its last meeting, expressing the esteem of the members for Hearn, the dry goods merchant of 14th street, New York, because he has always refused to install a grocery department in his big store. It was agreed to extend support to this merchant, whenever possible, in preference to department stores that compete with grocers. This may suggest possibilities of the loss of considerable trade to some department stores if the grocery organizations generally pursue a course of this kind.

B. Bischof, the president of the Brooklyn association, is to be presented by the organization as a candidate for vice-president of the National Association if Simon Clark is to retire from the trade, as has been reported here.

Austin, Nichols & Co. and the National Spice Co. are trying to convince the Federal authorities that "sago crude" in the form commonly imported does not come within any provision of the pure food law and also that it is not subject to a customs duty. As the sago is really potato starch and is not made from sago palm, the Agricultural Department is considering the question of forbidding its importation under the name of sago. At the same time the Customs authorities, learning the composition of the product, are trying to collect a tax of 1½ cents a pound. The tariff law provides for the free admission of "sago crude." The importers claim that for thirty-five years the product has been known as sago and therefore should be admitted under that name, as in the past, and should continue free from taxation. It is provided in the tariff law that the commercial designations in vogue at the time that the law was enacted, in 1897, shall govern. The question, as far the duties are concerned, is now before the Board of United States General Appraisers.

It is said that the Corn Products Co., in trying to relieve the consumer from the extra cost of manufacturing Karo, has taken out the profits of the jobber and the retailer. On the other hand the Quaker Oats Co. has reduced the weight of the packages, it is reported, and thus places the burden on the consumer. Another plan that is suggested in some quarters as the best is to get away from the 10-cent price standards and advance the price to the consumers without reducing the weight of the packages.

Dr. H. W. Wiley, the chemist of the Department of Agriculture, delivered a lecture Saturday before the Kings County Medical Society in Brooklyn. He spoke chiefly against the humbuggery of many of the patent medicines which do not possess the qualities that the advertisements indicate. He spoke of fraudulent testimonials, and as an instance said that one old woman, living in his native town, had for $2 sold the testimonial which has been widely published, saying that she had attained to the age of 106 years by drinking a certain brand of whisky. He spoke against the use of coloring matter and preservatives in food and said that cold storage and sterilization will in time afford all the facilities that are needed in preserving food in a wholesome condition. The coloring of butter, he said, is inexcusable.

An international pure food congress is advocated in resolutions adopted by the New Jersey Consumers' League, which held a convention this week at Cranford.

Inspectors have submitted to the Department of Health reports indicating that adulterated maple sugar is still being sold in this city; also that in some of the cheap class of stores teas are adulterated with various mixtures and substitutes. Sausages and chopped meats were found in bad condition in a number of instances. Some of the adulterated articles, it is supposed, were made in this city or State, so that the Federal authorities have no power to prevent their sale, but it is hinted that other adulterated articles come from outside the State, so that it behooves the Federal inspectors to go after the offenders against the food law.

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. The demand is confined absolutely to actual wants, there being not the smallest apparent disposition on anybody's part to anticipate needs. Low grades are still firm and strong. Higher grades are not quite so strong as the low grades, but seem to embody sufficient strength to have enabled them to hold up in face of the general disposition to squeeze the values of everything.

Coffee.

The Brazil coffee market has remained steady, with a slight admixture of weakness during the past week. Neither Rio nor Santos has shown any change in price. The demand is moderate. Mild coffees, Java and Mocha are unchanged and steady.

Sugar.

The sugar market has shown some uneasiness during the past week. Early in the week all refiners declined 5 points and later they advanced to the same amount. At present the situation is rather strong. Europe has advanced a substantial fraction upon the announcement that the French and German beet crop will be short. The New Orleans sugar market also shows an advance of 15 points. The Cuban crop will be cut also, and if these conditions continue alive and uncontradicted the market can be expected to show some strength from now on. The demand for refined sugar is dull.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is in fair demand at unchanged prices. Sugar syrup is wanted to some extent at ruling prices. Molasses is unchanged and as yet not especially active.

Fish.

The financial situation and the season together have at last had their effect on the fish market, and mackerel are lower. Some local holders reduced prices as much as $1 to $1.50 during the past week. Norway 2s and 3s are the weakest in that grade of mackerel. Irish fish show a rather decided weakness, owing to increased receipts. Codfish, hake and haddock are unchanged and just coming into a moderate demand. Domestic sardines are steady, unchanged and in quiet demand. Foreign brands are very scarce and high, as reported more in detail elsewhere. Salmon shows no change from last week but on Alaska grades the tone can scarcely be said to be as strong as it was.

Canned Goods.

There is practically no development of any character in the entire canned goods market. Tomatoes are neither weaker nor stronger and the demand is fair considering conditions. There is some expectation that the pack just over will be found to have aggregated 11,000,000 cases. This will not be more than the demand could easily take care of, and yet if the financial situation continues it would probably look large enough to make a weak market. In many cases jobbers have shipped out all or nearly all their future tomatoes to their customers and have practically none in stock themselves. Corn and peas are not selling. There is a regular steady little movement in corn at ruling prices, but nothing approaching a good brisk sale. Peas are steady and quiet at unchanged prices. Apples are unchanged and dull. Peaches show no improvement and no change. The general line of small Baltimore canned goods is unchanged and for the present exceedingly dull. California canned goods are unchanged and quiet in first hands.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are unchanged and dull. Secondary markets are in price somewhat below the coast parity. Peaches are unchanged and dull, and apricots are also. Loose raisins are still weak and soft, no business being done in them to speak of. Seeded raisins are also a substantial fraction lower, owing to the fact that the bulk of the new shipments have come forward. The demand is moderate. Apples are weaker and slow. Currants are about the only line which shows any good healthy activity this week.

Eggs.

The supply of fresh eggs is still extremely short, with not enough coming forward to supply the trade. There has been a general advance of 2 cents per dozen on new-laid stock by reason of the scarcity. This has been largely responsible for the better movement in refrigerator eggs, which show an advance of 1 cent per dozen. Stocks are moving out very satisfactorily, and if the cold continues there will probably be a better demand and higher

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for ne right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" nd contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried everal, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, robably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of win-ow-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window isplays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new r original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are erhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an verage price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement hould be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If rawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink ıot pencil).

rices on high-grade storage eggs. ow grades do not meet with the ame ready sale, but the market has een in much better shape this veek.

Beans and Peas.

Beans are active, owing to the old and snappy weather. There is omparatively little change in the narket, prices for pea beans on spot ıcing 10 to 15 cents higher than quotations to come forward. Mar-ows are a shade off to come for-vard. California limas are un-hanged and in fair demand. Dried eas, yellow and green, whole and plit, are all unchanged in price and n fair demand.

Butter.

The butter market has been very ıctive during the past week at an ıdvance of 1 cent per pound. The old weather has made a better eeling. The increased demand and he slight falling off in the make ıas produced a very healthy condi-ion, and the receipts are cleaning ıp regularly. Some houses are vithdrawing butter from storage to neet the demand. The market is ıow practically homogenous, and vhat is said above applies to all grades.

Cheese.

The cheese market is about un-changed from last week. There will probably not be any change un-il a better consumptive demand de-velops. Stocks in storage are now about 40 per cent. below a year ago. Just as soon as consumption be-comes better there will likely be higher prices. This may not take effect before the first of the year, however.

Provisions.

There has been a further general decline in everything in the smoked meat line except picnic hams. Skin-back and regular hams are off ½ cent. Picnics are not so plenty and therefore find a ready sale at un-changed prices. Sugar pickled bel-lies are off 1 cent, as is smoked bacon. Barrel pork and canned meats are unchanged. Dried beef is scarce at an advance of 1 cent. At the recent decline there has been an increase in the consumption of lard. Prices, however, are probably as low as they will be. Compound lard shows a little firmer feeling, though no advance.

York State potatoes, 63 to 67 cents per bushel; Pennsylvania, 70 to 72 cents per bushel; Jersey, 40 to 45 cents per basket, demand fair; sweet potatoes, primes, 75 to 85 cents per basket; culls, 30 to 35 cents per basket, demand fair to good; carrots, 40 to 45 cents per basket, demand fair; yellow onions, 55 to 70 cents per bushel, 40 to 45 cents per basket; white onions, 75 to 85 cents per bushel crate, demand fair; Danish cabbage, $2 to $3 per 100; domestic, $2 to $3 per 100, de-mand fair; white turnips, 20 to 25 cents per basket; yellow, 40 to 45 cents per basket, demand fair; cauliflower, $1.50 to $3.25 per bar-rel, demand fair; watercress, 2½ to 3 cents per bunch, demand fair; horseradish, Western, $6 to $7 per barrel; domestic, $4.25 to $5 per barrel, demand fair; spinach, $1.25 per barrel, demand fair; celery, York State, 40 to 60 cents per bunch; Pennsylvania, 7 to 10 cents per bunch, demand fair; parsnips, $2 to $2.25 per barrel, demand fair; pumpkins, $12 to $18 per 100, 40 to 50 cents per basket, demand good; oyster plants, 3 to 3½ cents per bunch, demand fair.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Spices.

The market is decidedly more active; the demand is better and stocks have very much decreased lately, which tends to make a firmer market. We look for higher prices to rule on some spices.

Pepper.—Futures are steady White pepper is in very large de-mand; prices rather firmer. The in-formation as to new crops is very indefinite, and it is really too early for any reliable estimate.

Cayennes are rather quiet, but unchanged. Prime Chillies will no doubt advance.

Cloves are very steady and some-what firmer.

Pimento (Allspice) is steady and unchanged; demand very fair.

Mace.—Demand large, and there is no doubt that the consumption has greatly increased.

Nutmegs are more active; pres-ent values are no doubt safe. Prices are lower than ever, and we now anticipate the market to react, and prices should slowly but steadily ad-vance.

Cassias.—Demand very good during the last week. There is a scarcity of some grades of bark.

Seeds.—Canary seed stationary. Good quality mustard scarce and high. Poppy seed slightly easier. Caraway is somewhat lower. Sage and sweet herbs are all in demand. Rubbed sage is being purchased by former buyers of the whole leaf, as it is more economical.

Gingers steady, but unchanged, and in fair demand.

McCormick & Co.
Baltimore, Md.

Imported Fish Products.

The trade in herring of all kinds has been exceptionally dull this last week, and prices in almost every in-stance have given way.

Holland herring are a drug on the market and cheaper than they have ever been before. Stocks here are plentiful and there is no demand at all in Holland, so that we do not look for an improvement in the situ-ation in the near future.

Scotch large full herring are in better demand and rather required. Stock of those is not so very large.

Norway herring continue in good demand.

Irish fatherrings are wanted at big prices, but there are not very many fine goods in the market.

Mackerel have been very dull, except Norways, which are moving fairly well in a hand-to-mouth way. Prices for those (we refer to first brands only) have not given way even a single cent. They are held as firmly as ever and stocks are very small and prices are likely to go higher after the turn of the year when demand sets in.

Imported oil sardines.—The situ-ation is as bad as ever. There is a fair demand and no supplies.

Sprats are also scarce, and Nor-way smoked sardines are decidedly scarce and continue in good de-mand. Catch of sprats in Belgium has not started yet. In France they have caught a few very small fish, which have now been packed and which are now on the way, but sup-plies are badly needed and are likely to find ready buyers.

Italian stockfish is rather scarce and shipments arriving are taken up readily by the trade. Supplies at the present time are not large enough to cover the demand.

Italian imported marinee eels have just arrived and show very fine quality this season. They are a specialty of Italy, especially of Venice, and at no place in the world can they be duplicated. They come in small packages of about 50 pounds and are a delicious morsel used principally by the Italian trade, but gradually being taken up as a delicacy by the German and kindred trades.

MARKET NOTES.

Lots of Florida oranges are com-ing forward in a half green condi-tion, and selling at all sorts of prices. The general range of these unripened oranges is $2 to $3 per crate, and the sale is very draggy. Really good fruit which is properly matured before leaving the State is eagerly wanted at $4, and enough cannot be obtained to fill the demand.

Cranberries are very draggy and slow. The price ranges from $1.75 to $2.25, which is much lower than it ought to be at this season. The supply seems excessive.

California Emperor grapes of fine quality average $1.75 per box, which is low. The demand is fair

Florida beans are now bringing a fair price—$2 to $2.25 per crate. The quality is good and the demand also.

Florida tomatoes range from $3 to $4 and the quality is fair. The demand is good. Of California tomatoes there are none. Hothouse fruit ranges from 25 to 30 cents per pound and is wanted.

Florida grapefruit is coming forward in good condition and is wanted at about unchanged prices —$3 to $5.

Florida tangerines average $5. The quality is good and the demand active.

New potatoes are in market from Bermuda and range from $6 to $6.50 per barrel. The quality of the receipts is good and the demand active.

Florida peas range from $3 25 to $3.50. The quality of the peas now coming forward is good and the demand takes about all that comes.

Florida eggplants range from $2 to $2.50 per case. The demand is only fair.

Florida salad is quoted at $2 to $2.50 per basket. Good salad is now in market and it sells readily.

Florida cucumbers are wanted at $2.25 to $2.50 per box. The quality and demand are good.

Florida peppers range from $1.75 to $2 per crate. The demand is fair.

Big New York Coffee Men Want to Change Methods of Coffee Buying.

New York importers and jobbers of coffee have issued the following circular:—

To Whom It May Concern:—

On and after that date we will accept only such import contracts as bear the following clause:—

"In the event of any question arising regarding quality this contract not to be void, but an allowance for inferior quality, if found, is to be made to buyers, to be settled by arbitration in New York."

The name or names of the arbitrator or arbitrators must be agreed upon at the time of the transaction and be embodied in the contract.

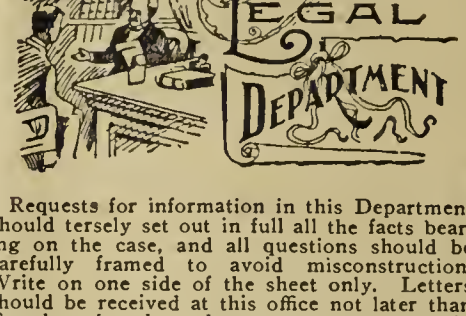
Small Stores May Not Be Able to Get French Sardines.

Ruling Thirty-five to Fifty Per Cent. Above Normal and Very Scarce. Large Stores Sell Many and Have Been Given Preference.

It is likely that in all but the large fancy retail grocery stores French sardines will not be seen during the next several months. As has been stated from time to time in the "Grocery World," the packs both of 1906 and 1907 have been dire failures and there are almost no new sardines to be had. The large stores find goods of this class such a necessary part of their stock that they have made strenuous efforts to get some and have succeeded to some extent. All of the large Philadelphia stores are selling French sardines to-day and claim to have enough to last out the season. The small stores that sell them as an incident will soon, if not now, have another story to tell.

The conventional French sardine has about 8 to 12 to the high quarter boneless can. There have been some sardines packed in France this year, but many of them have run from 3 to 5 to the can. Goods of this class, of course, not at all suit the trade which has been accustomed to fish so much smaller. The short pack of 1907 was not helped out any by the carry-over from 1906, as the pack of 1906 was even smaller than the pack of 1907. The extraordinary scarcity now existing has not been paralleled in many years. It is bringing out in the markets sardines as much as three years old, which, however, are actually better than those packed this year. The price is from $10 to $13 a case, based upon half tins, above the normal figure. This is 35 to 50 per cent.



Requests for information in this Department should tersely set out in full all the facts bearing on the case, and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office not later than Tuesday of each week to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge.

Question: * * *, ———, Pa.—January two years ago I leased a certain storeroom with cellar directly under storeroom for five years. In my part of the cellar there is a hot water furnace which heats the house. In the house part my lessor (or landlord) lives. In the lease there is a clause, "the lessor reserves the right to go through certain parts of the cellar to fix the fire," to which I was perfectly satisfied. But this year the landlord is going to move and intends to rent the dwelling part. Now, the question is, can he give the privilege to the tenant to go through my cellar? The lease distinctly says the "lessor" has the right. Can he transfer that right to any person without my consent? Your opinion would be greatly appreciated.

Answer.—In my judgment you cannot reasonably object to the easement, i. e., the right of way, through your cellar, passing with the lease to the other party. Your landlord rented you your cellar, retaining the furnace right of way. In other words, he only rented you the restricted use of the cellar, so to speak, and naturally you acquire nothing more under your new landlord than you had under your old, as long as you continue to work under the original lease. You have a right at all times, however, to demand that whoever passes through your cellar to reach the heater does so in an orderly and proper manner.

Question: * * *, N. J.—I have leased the place I now occupy for two years. Lease expires April 30th. If things go well I may decide to build a place of my own next year. Would it be entirely necessary to renew lease for an stated time, or could things be allowed to run on without danger of legal ejectment?

I am thinking of going into local politics to some extent (borough about 1,200). Can you advise me as to any books or other literature to read on the subject?

Has a town a right to get drinking water from a brook running through farming country and a smaller town and then to prohibit bathing, etc., in the brook; in short act as though they owned it?

Answer.—If you permit yourself to run over April 30th, the expiration of the lease, without having given three months' notice of a desire to terminate, you renew the lease for another year at least, and perhaps for two years; it depends on the wording of your lease. The safe plan would be to give the required three months' notice on or before January 30, 1909, and when the lease expires make a new one from month to month. To get out would then require but one month's notice.

I regret that I know of no book which will inform you upon average borough politics, which are usually of the "practical" variety. Works on political economy would scarcely suit.

As to the right of the town in the brook, your facts are very unsatisfactory. As a general principle, where a town's drinking water, wholly or in part, legally comes from a stream of water, it would have an undoubted right to protect its purity and cleanliness by forbidding bathing.

Dear Sir:—Inclosed you will find some "ad." matter which we run in the local paper, and also have some circulars run off from same copy. Kindly give us your opinion on same.

Yours truly,
THE HOME SUPPLY CO.
Per S. E. Downey, Manager.

This batch contained a considerable quantity of matter. There was a large yellow circular and several smaller ones. All of the stuff is rather better printed than grocers' circulars, both in the arrangement of the type and the quality of the paper. Here is the circular, which is probably the best of the lot:—

This is still open to criticism in several ways. The heading and the introduction are both too long. It wasn't necessary to give display type to telling when the sale began. "A Great Good Food Sale" would have been a good head, and it would have gone in one line and saved an inch of space. The date should have gone in the small type introduction. The introduction is too long; or to express more clearly what I mean, it contains too much matter for the space given it. With the head cut down, the introduction would have had more room to spread out.

The appearance of the small headed paragraphs in the text would have been greatly improved had the side heads been set in boldface instead of capitals. With the heads in capitals only, and the price in such large boldface, the paragraphs look bottom heavy. Smaller boldface should have been used for the prices.

Too little care has been taken to say a word or two about all the goods. Calling canned corn "creamy, tender and sweet" is good; any more would be overloading in a brief mention like this. But when you say of old Homestead brand coffee "roasted fresh in one pound air-tight cans," don't you see that you are telling nothing whatever about the real qualities of the coffee? You should put some sort of description in every advertisement you write. Make it as terse and persuasive as possible in a few words.

The other circulars I haven't the space to reproduce. The best one in all respects is a little sheet headed "Steel Cut," advertising a proprietary brand of coffee. Th large yellow circular advertises "Sensational Five Minute Sale," a novel plan. At 9 o'clock sharp lot of 25-cent brooms go on sale fo 14 cents. Five minutes later th old price goes back. At 9.15 some thing else drops for five minutes an so on all day. I should suppose lot of quick cash trade could b worked up out of this plan.

Heart-to-Heart Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Groce Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Ad vice From the Head of the House on Selling Goods an Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—ED.]

CLEAN HANDS.

Keep your hands clean. Dig under your finger nails. Never mind if it takes time. It pays. Women are critical right here. The sight of a man handling butter or cheese with dirty finger nails is disgusting. It's enough to queer a sale, and it does lose sales many and many a time. Don't allow it to happen with us. The rule holds good in every department. It's one of those small-big details that count.

SELL CANNED GOODS.

Push the canned goods end. Every order should represent a few cans of vegetables. Mention peas at 10 to 12½ to 15 cents. String beans, 10 to 12½ to 14 cents. Limas, tomatoes, asparagus, etc. Talk quality. Your 10-cent peas are large, but the flavor is there. The tomatoes at 11 cents are Jersey's and solid—far cheaper than the 10-cent goods. The limas at 12 cents are green, and those at 18 cents are midgets. Give a reason for prices.

BAD BREATH.

Ask your wife or your sweetheart or your chum whether your breath is bad. Never mind how yo feel about it. Just ask. Thousand carry a fearful breath and don' know it. A whisky or tobacc breath we, of course, won't tolerate but a chronic or an occasional ba breath resulting from indigestion i excusable. But if you are a victi remedy it. It precludes good sales manship. It reflects directly upo you and indirectly upon us. Tes your breath often. Your best friend will appreciate your sincerity.

TALK FISH.

Don't let any fish business ge away from you. There's no ex cuse for it. We're handling the best, and our Friday delivery is O. K. Land your customer down by the stand. Get her interested. Get her to associate fresh fish with us. That's one of the great things in business—this associating our store with this and that and the other. And remember that the thing that does it is quality. Don't care if you sold a man a steak for 3 cents a pound, if he finds it tough he'll dam you. The 3 cents is forgotten. The thing he remembers is dissatisfaction. So it isn't price that counts. Remember that.

Some Views By Me.

That article in the last issue about the new brokers' and agents' association caused me to sit up and take notice.

I think I know something about selling goods, and the different ways goods are sold. I've knocked out a few years' experience at it, I've thought about it a lot, and I have some ideas on the subject which I think are pretty solid.

In a good many cases—mind you, I don't mean all—these specialty orders are a measly nuisance. To everybody, too. If they're orders taken from retailers, they're often a nuisance to him because he don't want the goods and only signs the order to shake off a persistent salesman. While there's human nature in that, he's wrong, of course. I'll talk more about that in a minute.

They're a nuisance to the salesman who gets 'em because bona fide ones are so hard to get, and because he never knows when he really has one.

Almost always specialty orders are turned in through some jobber, and very often indeed they become a most outrageous nuisance to him because so many of 'em are turned down by people he don't want to scrap with.

In the neck is where many of the specialty manufacturers get it, too, because their business is rearing on a quicksand.

This looks as if I was trying to show up the specialty business as a pretty rotten business. Well, it is, in a whole lot of cases. Mostly because there are about ten times as many specialties as anybody wants.

The new association kicks because the jobber has no use for specialty orders. They are going to him and saying "see here, these orders are all right; won't you treat 'em with proper respect?"

Now, I have no idea what the jobber's answer was, but if I'd been him I'd a said "Sure I will, as soon as you make 'em worth respecting."

"But they're good respectable orders now!" comes back the specialty man, "every one of 'em was taken by a straight salesman and some retailer that you sell signed it. What's the matter with that?"

"Why, the fact that a lot of those same retailers won't take the goods when we cart 'em out," the jobber says.

"Why won't they?" says the specialty man, "because you've taken so durn long to do anything with 'em! That's not our fault! And besides that, you can always make the retailer take the goods if you want to. It's a legal contract."

At this the jobber bursts a button off his weskit.

"We can make him take 'em!" he whispers (whisper is sarcastic). "Why in (you know what belongs here) should we fight your battles. Do you really tell me that we should risk the trade of a dealer buying $200 a week from us over one case of your specialty that nets us 36 cents?"

Gentlemen, he's right.

Whose order is that? Who got it? What's it for? Where does the jobber come in?

It's the manufacturer's order, because his salesman got it. It's for the manufacturer's goods alone that very often the jobber don't even keep or want to keep.

The jobber comes in for only two reasons. First, to save the manufacturer the bother of individual delivery, and second, to keep the jobber's good will. He has really no more to do with the transaction than the railroad that ships the goods. Simply the channel through which the goods flow (when they flow) from the seller to the buyer; that's all he is.

Then, why in thunder should the jobber stir up a time about it? He knows nothing about the order except what he sees. By stirring it up he's got nothing to gain but somebody else's principle, and he's got a good customer to lose.

If the manufacturer would stand back of those orders the whole thing would be solved in six months. Maybe in less. You'd think he'd simply itch to stand behind them, because he's all the time in a hole from not doing it.

I'm going to tell you in two minutes, gentlemen, how to do the thing perfectly.

Don't make the order read as if it was on the jobber. Make it on the manufacturer. Somewhere in it leave a blank for the jobber's name who's to do the delivery. At the bottom or the top put a notice that the order is a legal contract and will be enforced. That means that he can't cancel.

Now, go to the jobber with your orders. Say to him you fill these orders. If the retailer lays down on 'em we'll first pay you your profit and then we'll sue him in our own name.

And then do it! Sue him! And then advertise the fact as widely as you can. In a little while there would hardly be a retailer who would dare to give you fellows an order and then lie down on it.

Why, if the manufacturers in this association would do this it would be the greatest thing that ever happened to their business!

It's a shysting trick, boys, this making contracts and lying down on 'em. You ought to stand by everything you agree to. No excuse for you at all! I know what you say, for you've often said it to me: "A fellow came in here selling stuff when I was busy and he wouldn't go. The only way I could get rid of him was to sign his order, which I did. Let 'em send out salesmen who know what no means and I won't have to do such things."

Do you mean to tell me you have no way to get a salesman out of your store when he won't go? Surely you're the boss of your own place, ain't you?

If he won't go, put him out! But listen here—show him a square deal first. Give him some kind of a hearing, anyway. Why maybe that poor fellow has walked about for days without getting an order. He's not offensive; he's desperate.

But after you know what he's got—and it won't take you five seconds to find out—and you've decided finally you don't want it, tell him so, and make him go.

But don't sign his order. That's mean all around.

ASSOCIATION NEWS

Portland, Ore.

The following circular has been issued to the customers of the members of the Portland (Ore.) Retail Grocers' Association:—

To Our Patrons: The present unusual condition of financial affairs has resulted in the temporary contraction of money circulation to a great extent. The great Northwest country, and Portland in particular, is wealthy, and has no occasion to be alarmed unless the people unreasonably withhold their money. This condition has forced upon the wholesalers the necessity of shortening their credits to the retail dealers to such an extent that all bills must now be paid in thirty days; while meat, poultry and commission-house bills must be paid weekly. This, in turn, has required the retailer to be more exacting in his collections in order to continue in business.

Many of our customers have grown careless in the payment of their accounts, and in normal times this did not prejudice business generally, but the time has come when all retail customers must pay promptly at a given time, on or before the 10th of each month. Wage-earners should pay the day following their pay day and no account can be permitted to run more than thirty days.

A prompt and hearty co-operation by the customers of all retailers will not only avert possible failure with its attending distress and suffering, but will insure the early return of the good times which we enjoyed up to a few weeks ago.

PORTLAND RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

The mutual insurance feature planned for retail merchants at the Sedalia (Mo.) convention has now materialized and a statement issued by the State president of the Missouri Retail Merchants' Association during the week tells that the company is now in shape to accept risks on the property of retailers of Missouri who are members of organizations affiliated with the Missouri Retail Merchants' Association.

In many cases we have entirely cured valuable horses that had received serious injuries to the joints. At Lakewood Farm Absorbine is always kept in the medicine chest." A Display of Laundry Articles.

Print the sign "Wash Day" in large letters.

Stretch a line across the window, on which hang an array of doll clothes, as if just washed, and fasten to line with clothes pins.

Then build a solid stand of some good washing powder—Snowboy, Pearline, or any kind. On this place a small tub and washboard, such as little girls use for washing their dolls' clothes, and then place a large doll at the board, in an attitude of readiness to wash. The doll should have sleeves rolled up and apron on.

About the window should be displayed everything necessary for the laundry. In the background washboards, clothes lines and basket of clothes pins. Then have a quarter's worth of the different kinds of good soap—Fel's Naptha, Lenox, Babbit's, Star, Acme, etc.—having as many bars as are given for a quarter in each display, and marked to that effect. Also the different kinds of washing powders, starch and bluing should be shown.

London, Eng., to Attack Corrupt Business Methods.

People of London, Eng., were beginning to think that the Commissions Act, which came into force at the commencement of the present year, was being allowed to remain inoperative, but something like a wholesale exposure of the corrupt practices affecting most trades and professions is on the eve of taking place. A number of contracts are being repudiated by employers who have found that their agents have, without their knowledge or consent, received what are practically bribes from the other side. That the giving of such gratuities is calculated to sap the fidelity of agents and destroy the integrity of their transactions for their principals was the chief reason for the passing of the act.

Have you taken advantage of that 70 per cent. profit proposition of ours? A great many grocers have done so and we want to hear from you. All of Goff's remedies are standards and are sold by more than 14,000 grocers. Write to S. B. Goff & Sons Co., Camden, N. J.

We would be pleased to have for publication in this column the ideas of our readers upon trade topics, it being understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for any views expressed therein. All communications must be accompanied by the writer's name and address as an evidence of good faith, but not necessarily for publication. All inquiries within our power to answer will also be noticed in this department.

As to Brazil Nuts.

Vermontville, N. Y., Dec. 2, 1907.
To "The Stroller."

My Dear Stroller:—I am in trouble. I want the advice of a wise man, therefore I come to you.

My trouble is this: I have a few hundred pounds of Brazil nuts which I wish to sell to the public. Now, I do not know whether these nuts grew in the forests of Guiana, Venezuela or Brazil.

Now, I would like to ask you if I would be liable to arrest if I sold these nuts as Brazil nuts and it should be proven that they grew in Guiana?

Kindly answer through the columns of the "Grocery World."

Yours truly, N. H. B.

As may be noted, the above letter was addressed to the "Stroller," but could not be delivered, as the "Stroller" is out of the city. It is accordingly turned over to the regular Correspondence Department to be answered, and that is precisely what the "Stroller" would have done with it, as he does not claim to be an expert upon the interpretation of the food law.

If the nuts which this correspondent is selling are the long-established "Brazil Nuts" of commerce, he may legally sell them as such, regardless of where they came from.

The Trading Stamp Scheme Again.

Milltown, N. J., Nov. 27, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly tell me what you think or know about the practical working of the trading stamp scheme.

Sperry & Hutchinson have had a lady solicitor around town talking the thing up, and I believe has given some of the people to understand that I would have them.

I should like to have any persons who have tried them to tell me their experience if they will.

Can you tell me where (in New York preferred) "Nail City" catsup can be purchased? Think it is put up in Wheeling, W. Va.

Thanking you in advance, I remain,

Yours truly,
CHRIS. CRABIEL.

The trading stamp scheme is not a matter which can be discussed within a few lines. There are occasions when it may be necessary to adopt the stamp scheme in order to prevent the loss of business to competitors who have adopted it. Where those conditions arise, th writer would adopt the plan, bu never under any other circun stances.

Nobody seems to know anythin about "Nail City" catsup.

No Fear of the Price Cutter

The retailer equipped with Johnson's "EVERSHARP" Slicer can smile serenely at his rivals' advertised bargains. They have no sting for him, they affect neither his trade or his profits.

As a bid for patronage: moist, soft cured beef, freshly cut in full-size wafer slices will draw more trade than any bargain your price-cutting rival can offer, and while the increased trade is permanent, it is more profitable ten times over than a line of price-cutting bargains.

No Risk of Competition

There is no other machine on the market can slice dried beef that can be sold in competition with these freshly-cut, pink-tinted, full-size wafer slices, transparently thin, smooth and glossy, handsome to look at, delicious to eat. Goods that sell as quick as shown and set the town to talking of their goodness.

Only one machine allowed in your town. You had better secure it while you can. Send for a sample of Johnson's sandwich-sliced beef, the beef that beats the world.

Parcels Post Battle Coming Surely

ostmaster-General's Annual Report Proclaims For It, and Department's Whole Strength Will be Devoted to Getting It. Two Well-known Merchants Write Postmaster-General Against Plan.

One of the hottest fights in the ming Congress will undoubtedly ntre around the parcels post fight. he Postmaster-General, E. von Meyer, is committed to the plan id seems determined to put it rough. By various tactics he has cused the organized retail mer- ants of the country even more bit- rly against the scheme than they ere before, and that the fight will w be carried upon the floor of ngress is assured.

In the Postmaster-General's an- al report, filed at the opening of ngress last week, the parcels post an was announced as follows:—

	Cents.
One ounce	1
Over 1 ounce and not exceeding 3	2
Over 3 ounces and not exceeding 4	3
Over 4 ounces and not exceeding 5	4
Over 5 ounces and not exceeding 6	5
Over 6 ounces and not exceeding 8	6
Over 8 ounces and not exceeding 12	9
Over 12 ounces and not exceeding 16	12

I recommend the establishment of a special parcels post system on rural delivery routes for packages originating on a rural route or at the distributing post-office for delivery by rural carriers to patrons thereof at a rate of 5 cents for the first pound and 2 cents for each additional pound or fractional part of an additional pound up to 11 pounds; for 2 ounces or less, 1 cent; over 2 ounces and up to 4 ounces, 2 cents; over 4 and up to 8 ounces, 3 cents; over 12 ounces and up to 1 pound, 5 cents.

This will be a great boon to the farmers, who have not the conveniences for obtaining the necessaries of life such as residents in cities enjoy. A special parcels post on r ral routes will facilitate consumption and thereby increase the business of the country merchant. Increased trade for the country merchant means increased orders for those from whom he purchases his supplies.

The retail merchants in cities have found that they increased their trade by delivering goods to their customers. The parcel post on the rural routes will enable the local country merchant to deliver goods to his buyers at an average cost of about 2 cents a pound, or 25 cents for eleven pounds, while the wholesale merchant, in order to reach these consumers by mail, will be compelled to pay 12 cents a pound, or $1.32 per eleven pounds.

Therefore, to gain the benefit of the special rates on rural routes, they would find it necessary to ship by freight to the point of the rural routes, and be obliged to establish many thousands of agencies and depots for handling. It is of incalculable importance that the country merchant should exist and prosper.

This is the same plan, in slightly different words, that the Postmaster-General has advanced on every possible occasion for the last several months. In answer to it two replies have gone to Washington during the past week. One was from S. R. Miles, president of the National Hardware Dealers' Association, and the other from J. W. Kilpatrick, president of the Georgia Wholesale Merchants' Association. Both are lengthy and since they discuss the whole plan in extenso cannot be reproduced in full.

The "Grocery World" does reproduce, however, those portions which comment on Mr. Meyer's statements that his scheme will actually benefit the country retailer.

Extracts from President Miles' letter follow:—

Now, about the country merchant, the other interested party who is to derive so much benefit by being able to secure most of his wares by parcels post. I can readily understand that nine merchants out of ten would, inside of twelve months after a general domestic parcels post became effective, to be able to supply the demand of their trade with 11-pound packages. Of what advantage would it be to the merchant to use a parcels post for the delivery of his packages when, to nearly every point in the United States, 100 pounds can be shipped by freight at a maximum cost of 40 cents, and in most States only 25 cents?

The future prosperity of the United States depends to a greater extent upon the prosperity of the rural communities and smaller villages and cities than upon any other condition. Any legislation that will take away from the retail merchants of the country even 25 per cent. of their present volume of business would mean absolute ruin to 90 per cent. of the merchants of the country inside of twelve months. If a money flurry or panic lasting only a year or two so reduces the volume of business as to throw into bankruptcy thousands of merchants, what would be the result if this reduction were made permanent.

It appears to me that it would be high time for your department to advocate a domestic parcels post when the demand came from the people who you claim would be so largely benefited; that is, the country retailer and the farmer.

There is only one way in which a retail merchant could take advantage of and be benefited by your proposed plan, even if it were confined strictly within the limits you propose, and that is by issuing a price catalogue covering every item in his store.

THE PHILADELPHIA ELECTRIC CO.

TENTH AND CHESTNUT STREETS

This not one merchant in ten could afford to do. It would compel him to have one price for delivery by mail and another price to people who called at his store and made their purchases in person. This plan would not be at all practical and would cause no end of trouble and confusion. While on the other hand, the mail order houses (whom this proposed plan is clearly intended to benefit) would price every article in their catalogue on a delivery basis and eliminate all the non-profit bearing goods, leaving that class of business to the few remaining country merchants.

You cannot increase a merchant's trade by any plan that will keep people away from his store, making it possible for them to make their purchases at home. A system of this kind would mean a serious curtailment of business; and the people under this condition would buy only necessities, and it would be a sorry day for the business interests of this country, when the mercantile business was confined to the mere necessities of life.

The retail merchants are not asking for this special class of legislation. The demand for your proposed plan is not coming from that source, as it would decrease rather than increase their business.

President Kilpatrick's ideas were as follows:—

> A concrete examination of your country merchant placating plan of parcels post, however harmless or advantageous it may look on its face, offers nothing of practical utility and benefit to the local retailer. It would be an exceptional case, indeed, where either the country merchant or his rural route customer would care to take advantage of the parcel carrying privilege offered by the Government in their trade relations of seller and buyer, for one or the other would have to pay the carrying charges, and neither would feel that he could afford to do so on ordinary merchandise. There might be emergency cases where the farmer would order a few pounds of nails sent to his farm by the rural mail carrier and be willing to pay half their value or more to have them brought to him, but as a general proposition Uncle Sam would find little use for his services as a delivery boy for the country merchant, and such services would more often prove a nuisance and source of disagreement between the latter and his rural route customers. At present the rural free delivery carriers have the privilege of delivering non-mailable parcels to patrons along their routes, and in most instances their services can be more cheaply utilized in this regard than would be possible if the Government exacted a regular carriage fee of 5 cents for the first pound and 2 cents for each additional pound. If the parcels post were practical to deliver the goods of local merchants to customers, which it is not, it would not be desirable that it be generally utilized for the purpose, any more than it would be desirable that city dwellers shop without going to the dry goods stores. The country merchant, in his humble way is as interested in building up a good trading point by displaying his wares to attract the eye of customers as is the city merchant, and he profits in the same way by doing so. He sells his goods by allowing the customer to examine them and desires to see his store crowded with prospective buyers. The telephone order system would reduce the average storekeeper to handling unprofitable staples alone, for his customer, not seeing his complete stock and being without ocular temptation to buy, would be apt to order the profit-bearing class of goods from foreign catalogue houses.

All of the large national mercantile associations, including the National Retail Grocers' Association will have representatives at Washington this winter to fight the plan.

Spokane Grocers Denounce Parcels Post.

Say a Much Better Scheme Would Be One Cent Letter Postage. Who Mercantile Northwest Said to Be Aroused Against Plan.

Spokane, Wash., Dec. 2, 1907.

The Spokane Grocers' Association, at its bi-weekly meeting in the Empire State Building, where C. A. Nickum, vice-president, was in the chair in the absence of President U. G. Allen, adopted resolutions in opposition to the Parcels Post Bill promoted by Postmaster-General George von L. Meyer, urging instead the establishment of a 1-cent letter rate. The resolution points out that the parcels post would be harmful to both wholesale and retail interests of the country, would retard the development of the West, kill or severely cripple the rural merchant, discourage and prevent the establishment of factories of many kinds in the West where the wages are higher than in the East, that such legislation would directly favor the large trade centres and catalogue houses at the expense of the small towns, resulting in ruining the home market for the farmer, the result being injury instead of benefit to him. The resolution adds:—

> We hereby place ourselves on record as opposed to such legislation and request our Senators and Congressmen to work and vote against any and all such bills.
> Believing in taking timely precautions in other matters bearing upon their general welfare, a resolution was taken as follows:—
> Resolved, That we deny the rights of Elisha Winters to speak for or commit in any way the retail grocers' associations of the country, as we have no knowledge of his holding any official position or of his being in any way connected with our organization.

The Spokane Chamber of Commerce adopted the same attitude.

PEANUTS—FIVE A BAG

Everywhere you go you hear that cry. Don't you think you should have some of the trade that the peddler has? If you knew that with an you could clear 300 per cent., would you not put one in when you learn that any boy can run it, and that there's nothing to get out of order, and that it will pay for itself in one month's time? We think you will, and we will be pleased to furnish further particulars and prices on request.

WHERE the GLASS JAR COMES IN

The glass jar in which Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa—and that only—is packed offers the entering wedge to a sale, because it is unusual.

No woman ever saw cocoa packed in glass before; the sight is novel; she asks about it, and if you help a little, she buys.

Bought once, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa will always be bought again, for it has a flavor which has never been successfully imitated. Our exclusive making process removes the bad, develops the good, and the result is the smoothest, most delicious drinking cocoa on the market.

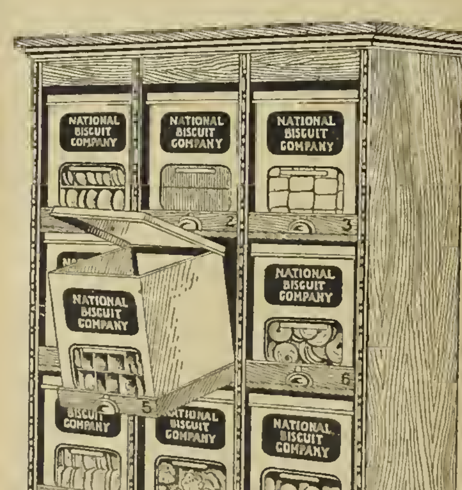
How to Make Your Cake Trade Pay



The easiest, cheapest and simplest way to make your cake trade pay a decent profit is to put in a DURHAM DISPLAY CAKE CABINET.

This cabinet is the most useful store fixture ever introduced to the trade. It prevents your most serious losses—those caused by sampling and breakage.

The saving on these items alone will soon pay for the cabinet.

It is made of highly polished oak, in sizes to hold 12, 16, 20 and 24 cans of standard size. It is light in weight and so arranged that the cans rest upon elevated roller trays, easy to slide in and out, and as each can is numbered you save time and labor in taking and filling orders.

Send for full particulars and prices.

Pickles Packed in Tin

The Hoffman House little pickles have special features that ought to interest you in them.

First, they are packed in sanitary cans.

Second, they are prepared by a new process, and have a pickle taste instead of a vinegar taste.

They are guaranteed to keep in any climate, and are altogether the tastiest, meatiest, spiciest little pickles ever put on the market.

Being packed in cans, they are a novelty. You can sell novelties.

More Lady Acquaintances

There are other good laundry soaps on the market, of course there are, but none seem to be the same hardy "stayers" that Babbitt's Best has been for years.

Babbitt's Best Laundry Soap is known by more housewives, and known better, than any other soap made. This isn't conceit—the sales sheets tell. We know what's going on.

MADE BY

B. T. BABBITT

NEW YORK

The GREAT Ramly

Is the one spelled R-A-M-L-Y, the finest Turkish cigarette ever made to sell for 10 cents. So good, other cigarettes are made to look like it, so they will sell on the Ramly's reputation.

If you want to give your customers an ideal smoke, sell them the Ramly. You won't have to tell them about it the second time—they'll ask for it.

It Made No Difference to Us

No gelatine sold in this country was less affected by the Federal Food Law than Chalmers'.

Our brands complied with the legal standard even before there was one. How could they help it? They were simply unsophisticated gelatine, made of pure unadulterated calves' stock and spring water. There was nothing to change about them, nothing to alter in any way.

We take a just pride in the fact that while the Federal Food Law caused some manufacturers to completely transform their business, it made no more difference to us than if it had never been passed.

Two styles—granulated and shredded.

From the Udder to the Carton

From the unmilked cattle in the meadow to butter in Gurnse cartons, there is nothing that makes for richness and purity which we leave undone.

We control Gurnse butter from the very beginning. The milk comes from our own dairies, is pasteurized by us, and we follow and supervise every stage of the butter making.

That is why we say so loudly and persistently that Gurnse butter is a very unusual article. There is no other butter quite its equal in richness, dryness, smoothness, and delightful flavor, and particularly in the regularity of all these qualities.

If you once start selling it, you'll never stop.

Money Savers

This truck will do more work than two double teams at about half the expense. The delivery wagon shown below will do more work than three teams at a third the expense.

Saving money is making money. You want to make money, don't you?

When you can do your hauling and delivering cheaper and quicker by Rapid Automobiles than you can by horse-drawn vehicles you have two very good reasons for using them. There is another, the Rapid Machines are so handsome they are the most effective kind of street advertisements.

Buying Canned Goods You Don't Get?

No better canned goods are packed in Maryland than our Blue Bell and Clover Farm brands. That in itself is a sufficiently good reason for handling them. Another reason quite as strong is that we sell these brands to the jobber under a guarantee of 100 per cent. delivery, and he can sell them to you in the same way.

When you buy future canned goods, wouldn't you feel more comfortable to know exactly what you are going to get? Under the average canned-goods contract you can get all, half or none, just as the packer pleases.

No Friends Among the Wheelwrights

Wheelwrights don't think much of the "J. M." delivery wagon; it doesn't make enough money for them. No wagon pays fewer visits to the repair shop, or makes its visits shorter.

The most celebrated delivery wagon made—the best wagon ever built for the grocery trade. Strong as iron, yet easy-running; finest steel tires, and wheels from second-growth hickory. Send for catalogue.

"Is This What I Made?"

If the cook who invented Baked Beans with tomato sauce were to come back and open up some of the cans labeled Baked Beans he would go gladly back to oblivion.

For "Baked Beans" doesn't always mean baked beans any more. In most cases it means beans boiled or steamed, dampened with a little cheap catsup and packed. The result is an attempted fraud on the palate of him who knows the real thing.

L. & S. Baked Beans are really baked in the good new way. We guarantee that absolutely. Baking makes the bean over. Instead of swelling and mushing it up like steaming or boiling, it leaves it just as firm but mealy and melting.

And our tomato sauce is tomato sauce made by an expert.

Wake Up, Mr. Frere, You're Dreaming!

The Latest Scheme Presented to Grocers Increased a Yearly Business of $5,000 to $200,000 in sixteen months. How a Brooklyn Grocer Simply by Incorporating His Little Business and Juggling the Stock, Multiplied His Holdings Many Times in a few Months. Did the Gentleman Dream It?

Behold, another scheme is born by which all lame and halt grocery businesses can be rescued from their forlorn condition! A gentleman named J. Merrick Frere, "corporation and financial counselor," of New York and Washington, has a plan by which a grocer may inflate his business and his assets in a very short time to several times their former value. Hear him tell about it:—

In February, 1906, James Carroll was running a little corner grocery in Brooklyn, N. Y., that occupied a room not more than 20 by 40 feet, employing one clerk and an errand boy. A push cart was used to make deliveries, as his trade was confined to a few blocks. The sales did not average over $100 a week, and his entire capital was but a few thousand dollars. Today he has a large warehouse and five stores. He carries on his pay roll over 100 employees and requires eighteen teams to take care of deliveries, as his business extends over the entire borough. The phenomenal development of this business was brought about by the adoption of a unique idea and skillfully advertised by various novel deviees. The plan was devised and executed by J. Merrick Frere, of New York City, an expert in corporation law, finance and advertising.

A company was organized with an authorized capital of $100,000, to which Carroll transferred his business for the entire capital stock, making it fully paid and non-assessable. He then placed $40,000 of the stock in the treasury of the company, which was used to purchase business, and kept the balance for himself. A system of advertising was then begun, calling the attention of the public to the faet that a discount of 20 per eent. would be allowed on all purchases, which discount would be paid in stock at the rate of one share (par value $1) for every $5 worth of goods bought.

By July, 1907, all of the $40,000 of stock had been distributed, producing $200,000 of business, on which the average net profit was 10 per cent. or $20,000, out of which Carroll paid himself a salary of $4,000 for managing the business, declared a 6 per eent. dividend on $100,000 of stock and put $10,000 back into the business for working capital. In sixteen months his original business, at most not worth more than $5,000, had enhanced to $110,000. It had paid him in salary and dividends $7,600, and his customers in dividends $2,400. His personal worth, exclusive of his salary and dividends, had increased from $5,000 to $66,000, the value of his $60,000 of stock. He had given his eustomers securities worth $44,000 besides the dividends paid them. In this short space of time he had made $68,600 for himself, and by distributing $46,400 to the public had built up a a powerful big paying business that no competitor could take away.

The conditions under which this business was built up were such as would be found almost anywhere—the usual competition prevailing. The success of this firm can be emulated by any business man understanding his line, who will treat the trade fairly by selling the right goods at a reasonable price.

Attention is called to the fact that where the apparent discount is 20 per cent., it is actually only 1 per cent., and when this is not paid in cash it certainly must be conceded that it is very cheap advertising.

Mr. Frere closes his interesting little story with the offer to do the same for any grocer who has a $5,000 yearly business which he wishes enlarged to $200,000 in a year and a third.

There are several things about this story that don't smell quite fresh. To begin with, the mercantile rating books show no grocer in Brooklyn named James Carroll. Mr. Frere says when he got hold of him Carroll was doing $100 a week and had a capital of "only a few thousand dollars." Any grocer could do a business of $100 on a capital of $500. Eighteen teams to deliver goods from five stores also seems a little lurid.

The "Grocery World" wouldn't like to say that Mr. Frere dreamed all this, because some very queer things happen in this world, but it is by no means convinced by his story that it ever happened. The "corporation and financial counselor" has sent out copies of his statement to a large number of the grocers of the East; possibly we may see some more millionaires in sixteen months.

High Sugar Prices Ahead?

Raw Sugar Markets in All Sections Firm on Reduced Crop Reports. Europe, Cuba and New Orleans All Advanced. Looks Like Higher Prices Next Year.

If present appearances can be relied on, the coming year is going to witness higher prices on sugar than have prevailed during the greater part of the year just closing.

In all important growing sections, the prospects for the growing of sugar crop are poor. The European beet market has advanced several notches during the past week, owing to the expectation that the current crop would be considerably reduced. The situation in Europe is quite strong on account of this condition.

The market for Cuban cane sugar has advanced 15 points during the past week on account of the practical certainty that the new crop would be late and smaller than last year.

The New Orleans market, where the price of raw sugar has been greatly depressed, has advanced 3/8 cent from the lowest point.

Prospects for the American beet sugar crop are about the same as last season.

All of this firmness in raw sugar has as yet had no effect up refined sugar, but it naturally will if it continues. The margin between the present selling price of refined sugar and the current market for raws is about 75 cents per 100 pounds, which is smaller than the refiners like to have it.

Beware How You Sell Distilled Vinegar.

Pennsylvania Food Department Enforcing Vinegar Law Against Dealers who Sell It as White or White Wine Vinegar. Must Be Labeled "Distilled Vinegar." Retail Grocers' Association Issues Warning Notice.

The Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Department has begun to enforce the vinegar law of 1897, and already one or two large dealers have been caught. In nearly all cases the offense was the sale of distilled vinegar improperly labeled. The act forbids the sale of such vinegar as white vinegar, or white wine vinegar, but compels it to be labeled "distilled vinegar."

The Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association has issued the following warning to its members during the past week:—

December 9, 1907.

To the Members:—

Your attention is called to the fact that no vinegar must be sold as pure apple or cider vinegar unless it is the legitimate product of pure apple juice; vinegars not the product of pure apple juice must be sold either as fermented or distilled vinegar. In this connection we call your atttention to Section 2, of the Act of Assembly, as follows:—

All vinegar made by fermentation and oxidation, without the intervention of distillation, shall be branded "fermented vinegar," with the name of the fruit or substance from which the same is made. And all vinegar made wholly or in part from distilled liquor shall be branded "distilled vinegar," and all such distilled vinegar shall be free from coloring matter added before, during or after distillation, and from color other than that imparted to it by the process of distillation. And all fermented vinegar, not distilled, shall contain not less than one and one-half per centum by weight on full evaporation, (at the temperature of boiling water), of solids derived from the fruit or grain from which said vinegar is fermented. And all vinegar shall be made wholly from the fruit or grain from which it is represented to be made, and shall contain no foreign substance, and shall contain not less than four per centum by weight of absolute acetic acid: Provided, That this shall not be construed to prohibit the use of such an amount of spices as are necessary for flavoring, provided such spices do not color the vinegar.

Inasmuch as prosecutions are being brought for the sale of vinegar not sold true to name, we deem it wise to call your special atttention to the Act of Assembly and to caution you to sell your vinegar only as purchased and billed to you; especially does this caution apply to white vinegar, which should be sold as distilled vinegar.

Yours truly,

WM. SMEDLEY, Sec'y.

Lawsuit Over Cereal Company's Advertising Wink.

It was recently determined by the Supreme Court of King County, New York, that a manufacturer may have a proprietary interest in a wink as an advertising feature. The question came up on a motion to make permanent an injunction which had been granted at the suit of the Toasted Cornflake Company against the American Rice Food and Manufacturing Company. The former company alleged that it had adopted the wink, together with the letters "K-T-C," to be used as a mystery advertisement and to be followed by the announcement that "K-T-C" stood for Kellogg's Toasted Cornflakes. The wink, which was to be directed at the grocer, was broadly advertised, and on a specific day the answer to the wink was a sample of the advertised food. The Rice Food Company advertised that "K-T-C" was the symbol of its own product. The motion to make permanent the injunction was granted.

How One Town Knocked Out the Mail Order House

Battle Creek, Mich., Was Spending Nearly a Million Dollars a Year With the Catalogue Houses when the Business Men's Association Launched a Campaign to Keep It at Home. Details of the Plan. Why the Grocery Club Disbanded.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Battle Creek, Mich.,
Dec. 1, 1907.

Perhaps a brief description of the way in which the retail merchants of this city drove out the mail order concerns and got back the trade for themselves, may be interesting to the readers of the "Grocery World."

The catalogue houses, such as Montgomery Ward & Co. and Sears, Roebuck & Co., of Chicago, find their chief harvest through the Northwest country, which is the great farming district of the United States. They sell all over the land, but more largely in the Northwest than anywhere else.

Battle Creek is a city of 26,000 population. It is in the midst of a very rich farming population, and it was learned that some of the farmers hereabouts spent as much as $500 per year with the mail order houses. The Business Men's Association of Battle Creek estimated that the people within a radius of twenty miles of that city spent $800,000 a year with the catalogue houses. Naturally this was a heavy loss to the local merchants.

The first thing done was the enlisting of the Battle Creek newspapers. Their sympathy was aroused and they unitedly preached the gospel of keeping trade at home. Then detectives were sent to quietly spot the freight and express shipments that came into the town, with the result of securing one thousand names of persons who sent money over the heads of the local merchants to the catalogue houses. A strange feature of this list was that it contained the names of some of the local merchants themselves.

Then moral suasion began on the farmers. Special sales and auctions were held to get them into town, lunches and lectures were given for them, and at every possible opportunity it was impressed upon the people who had been buying of the catalogue houses, that they owed it to their local merchants to buy at home.

A most important feature of the campaign was a series of demonstrations showing that goods could be bought at home as cheap or cheaper than of the catalogue houses.

For instance, a club of twenty Battle Creek women had been buying groceries from a Cincinnati catalogue house, in lots aggregating $80 or $90. The Business Men's Association proved that they could buy them 19 per cent. cheaper from a local grocer. They had the figures to prove this statement, and the "club" has disbanded. There were some articles on the list cheaper than the local grocer could sell them—sugar, for example—but in the aggregate the club was paying more for Cincinnati groceries than they could be bought for right here in Battle Creek.

Another part of the plan was the building of good roads leading into Battle Creek. The result of the campaign to date is that the catalogue houses, while they still sell some goods in and around Battle Creek, "have ceased to be a menace," to use the words of the secretary of the Business Men's Association.

Grocer Has to Pay Too Much For His Insurance

Thoughtful New Jersey Grocer Emphasizes the Fact that Insurance Rates are Steadily Advancing, and Business Men are Compelled to Pay More Now Than Ever Before. Discusses Mutual Companies and What He Considers Are Faults.

The question of grocers' insurance is an old one, I know, but one in which we are all interested, and probably will bear just a little more threshing.

Up to probably three years ago I was paying $1 per year per thousand insurance. Now I am required to pay $1.61 for the same thing. This in a town with a good water system, fire plugs every square or so apart, two fire companies, with lots of hose, etc., for which we annually pay a special fire tax of fair dimensions, besides a water tax of nearly $20 per plug.

The thing seems so outrageous to me, particularly when I realize that in the last thirty years there has never been but one slight fire in one of the twelve stores of the town, that I wonder why it is we submit to it.

It goes without saying we must have fire insurance—but where.

The old-line companies, as I understand, are all combined in one big trust and hence have but one price, and competition is all done away with. It seems to me this very thing would be a good one for our good Roosevelt to turn his searchlight on.

The word "mutual," as given to a fire insurance company, seems to kill it—at least seems to take away the feeling of certainty we want to have that in case of a loss falling on "us" we will be protected—and yet one hardly likes to join a company in which, in addition to a small premium, he will be compelled to give a note promising to pay a whole lot more if the losses require it. In such a company it would seem one would never know what the cost would be until his policy had expired, and yet all the time he knows if things did go wrong the cost might be excessive.

Just at this time I have learned of the Grocers' Cash Deposit Mutual Company, of Huntingdon, Pa. How long it has been in existence I know not, neither do I know of the standing of any of the men managing it, which I argue is a very important point, but from what little I have read about it in the company's circulars it does seem as if it were on pretty nearly the right track to give us what we need at the right price.

And yet one little door even here seems to be left unguarded. "Each member is required to deposit with the company" a certain sum, say, $50, which "remains his property and is returned to him whenever his insurance ends." Some one man must "hold" a large amount of money that does not belong to him.

Experience has sadly proved that not all men are capable to withstand the temptation here offered, particularly since it might

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice From the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—ED.]

FINDING WORK.

The time never was when no work was to be done in a grocery store. Don't leave the entire arranging of the shelves to the stock clerk, nor the dusting and entire wood cleaning to the porter. Take a pride in keeping the back of your counter as clean as the front, and the hidden stock as neat as that which is exposed. Rainy days are the busiest days for the man that has the eye for finding work. This "finding work" principle is a good one to practice. The fellow that waits to be told what to do usually has to wait for an advance of pay till he asks for it, and he usually asks for it.

FARMER CUSTOMERS.

The farmer doesn't deal in pounds and half pounds. Talk about those bushel sacks of salt at 45 cents. The twenty-five pound boxes prunes at $2.25; the No. 9 stable brooms at 45 cents, and the gallon jug molasses at 50 cents. Mention the old-fashioned buckwheat in 10-pound bags at 25 cents; the loose rolled oats; Graham and rye flour and quote him our patent flour by the barrel. He's a five-pound coffee buyer, and he wants something "good and strong." He won't pay over a dollar for the five pounds and it's up to you to get that dollar. Get it away from the "coffee store" or the small jobber if you can.

FRESH MEAT CUSTOMERS.

No doubt lots of women from whom you take orders has "her own butcher." Is there any good reason for this? None that we know of. Speak of meats. Quote steaks and chops and ask her to "look." If you land one permanent meat customer out of six your're doing good work for the firm. Start in Monday morning and make up your mind to do this.

LIKE YOUR WORK.

You must like your work if you want to do justice to yourself and us. If there is anything distasteful about it, or if you are out of harmony with your surroundings, it's best to talk it over with the manager.

Above all things don't get "sore." Don't get disgruntled and keep it up. Such a condition creates a bad atmosphere and invites simple failure. The food business is the most interesting on earth, and there's practically no limit to the point when you can say "I know it all."

Catch the Sharp Appetites

Your customers will come home from their vacations with freshly sharpened appetites—more than ever receptive to good food and drink.

Give them Hotel Astor Coffee now and it will meet with an instant response. Hotel Astor succeeds always, but more quickly than ever just now when appetites aren't jaded.

The New Jersey "Trade Review" nominates Mr. William Smedley, secretary of the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association, for the next secretary of the National Association of Retail Grocers. Well, Smedley isn't very much for looks, but like most men who realize that they will never get rich on personal beauty, he is an everlasting hustler. Without doubt he would make a wonderful National secretary, but he would probably be the hardest man in the United States to get to take the place.

One of the snarls in our economic system is that if our prison inmates are to be kept at hard labor, as unquestionably they should be in order to pay for their keep, the product of their labor must inevitably compete with the product of free labor, and thus create great bitterness and heartburnings among the free laborers, who claim they are being discriminated against.

Where Shall Prison-Made Goods Go?

Witness the denunciation now rising from broom manufacturers all over the land against ex-Governor Hanly, of Indiana. Ex-Governor Hanly recently said publicly that the people should buy prison-made brooms. One broom-makers' union, in fervid denunciation, said that the ex-Governor's advice "put a premium on crime," which seems rather humorously absurd, since one can scarcely imagine a criminal breaking into jail for the proud distinction of making brooms.

But seriously, where are the prison-made goods to go? All sorts of things are being made in jail, the bulk of which must be brought out and thrown on the market. In the main they are as well made as those produced outside and can be sold much more cheaply. If you give them the market you destroy the free manufacturer. If you deny them a market you cannot at the same time continue to keep the convicts at work. If you relieve the convicts from work, you return to the old method of solitary confinement, which all penologists say is fearfully destructive to the minds and morals of prison inmates.

Dr. Wiley's Sulphur Experiments.

The final denunciation by Dr. Wiley of the use of sulphur in bleaching dried fruits and molasses has, since its publication two weeks ago, aroused widespread comment and speculation, particularly among those affiliated with the two industries referred to. When the Government finally announces, as it probably will, that no dried fruits and molasses containing sulphur may be sold, the action will likely be grounded on this pamphlet of Dr. Wiley's. Hence the extreme consternation with which it has been received.

Now, whether the use of sulphur in food is harmful to the eater is a chemical question entirely. The writer is not a chemist, and is therefore wholly incapable of criticising the experiments from a technical standpoint. But there are certain features connected with them which common sense seems scarcely able to swallow. Dr. Wiley administers his preservatives in capsules instead of permitting the subject to eat food containing them in the ordinary way. The capsule plan he defends at some length in his pamphlet, although it is condemned by the majority of all leading chemists of the country.

As a result of taking the sulphur in capsules, Dr. Wiley reports that he got the following results:—

> These data clearly show that the administration of sulphites and of sulphurous acid in a free state in the quantities employed produces harmful effects. A tendency is manifested in practically every case to produce headache and digestive disturbances. In some cases these symptoms are not clearly marked, while in others they are extremely well defined. In many cases uneasy sensations and even pain were developed in the stomach and intestines and there were complaints of "heartburn." There were also in some cases attacks of dizziness and palpitation of the heart. In a few cases nausea was developed to the extent of vomiting.
> It appears, therefore, that the administration of sulphurous acid in the form of sulphite tends to reduce the weight of the body slowly, and that this tendency is continued for a considerable time after the withdrawal of the preservative.
> In general it may be said that the most prominent symptom was that of headache, which could hardly have been caused by the imagination. This symptom was very commonly and very persistently experienced at some time during the preservative period.

Now, if the sulphurous acid introduced into the system of Dr. Wiley's subjects through his capsules was of the same quantity as that contained in a normal portion of molasses or dried fruit, and if its administration by capsule was precisely the same in all respects as its administration in food, why has not the eating of sulphured dried food or molasses produced these same symptoms?

On the one hand we have millions of people who for years have steadily eaten dried fruits and molasses containing sulphurous acid in perfect safety and comfort, experiencing neither nausea nor headache, nor pain, nor heartburn, nor loss of weight. On the other hand we have Dr. Wiley's twelve young men experiencing all those symptoms after being fed for two weeks with sulphur in capsules. Could any evidence be stronger that the two methods of administering sulphur are totally different, and that the results obtained by capsule administration prove absolutely nothing against the use of the same preservative in food?

The New York Letter

The Editor regrets that the death of the father of its regular New York Correspondent, Fred A. McGill, has made it impossible for Mr. McGill to forward his usual news letter for this issue.

The "Grocery World" wishes nobody ill, but the news from the West that Sears Roebuck & Co. the Chicago mail order house, have apparently been detected by the United States Government in selling goods under misrepresentation, will at least not sadden the merry Christmas season. The evidence on which the Government's indictment was based was secured by the Iowa Retail Merchants' Association, and is said to be complete in every detail.

The Right Way to Fight Mail Order Houses.

This is the decent way to fight the mail order houses—show up their frauds and their lies, and publish the fact broadcast. One bona fide exposure like this has more real weight in the movement to keep local trade at home, than a thousand years of such schemes as the "black book scheme," which comprehended getting the firm's catalogues and burning them. The latter was the most utterly illogical idea imaginable. The only way to cripple the mail order house is to show its customers that it is unworthy of confidence. The burning of its catalogues not only did not do this, but it aroused the consumers' sympathy.

Another Food Trust Sued.

United States Government Brings Action Against Texas Millers' Association, Which Comprises 120 Millers and Dealers. Charged with Maintaining an Illegal Combination to Restrain Trade and Inflate Prices.

These are unhealthy times for trusts and combines of all sorts in this country. Every time a little combine raises its head the Government stands ready to whack it. The latest action along this line is that brought by the United States Attorney-General against 120 concerns comprising the Texas Millers' Association. The defendants are flour millers, and they are accused of maintaining an illegal combine in restraint of trade. In detail the following are the counts for the indictment:

1. To prevent competition among the members thereof in the purchase of wheat and other grain, and in the sale of flour and other products of grain.
2. To fix and regulate the price of flour and other products of grain.
3. To fix and regulate the difference in prices between the different grades of flour.
4. To prevent payment of brokerage and the allowance of discounts.
5. To make it difficult for millers to depart from the prices fixed by the Association.
6. To discipline members who refuse to abide by the prices and regulations fixed by the Association.
7. To prevent the allowance of credit in the sale of flour and the other products of wheat.
8. To prevent competition in the purchase of wheat and other grain.
9. To fix and regulate the price of wheat and other grain and the products of grain.
10. To prevent competition in the purchase of wheat and grain and sale of products of grain, and to monopolize said business.
11. To prevent free competition in the purchase and sale of grain.
12. To lessen and regulate the output of flour and other products of grain.

Frankford Association Organizes Building Association. Lewistown Merchants Busy With Plans for Public Benefit. Other Small News of the State.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Erie, Pa., Dec. 12, 1907.

The Frankford Retail Grocers' Association have organized a building and loan association and will apply for a charter.

A large and enthusiastic meeting of the Business Men's Association of Lewistown was held Tuesday night at the office of the secretary, W. H. Meyers. The 6 o'clock closing movement was considered at length, and by an almost unanimous vote the present closing agreement will remain as it is at present, with the exception that merchants will keep their stores open on railroad pay day.

Resolutions regarding the postal savings bank and parcels post were drafted and copies sent to the National Representative and Senators.

Other matters pertaining to new manufactories were acted upon. A fund for purchasing grounds for new industries will be raised.

At a recent meeting of the Pittsburg Retail Butchers' and Meat Dealers' Protective Association the following officers were elected: president, Henry G. Fese; vice-presidents R. W. Medick, Charles Fink; treasurer, Nils Lundell; recording secretary, George J. Kurtz; financial secretary, J. B. Schamberg; directors, H. F. Sachs, J. Hartman, M. Schlanger, F. T. Roos, M. Fleming, J. Nusbaumer, H. C. Clapper, Charles Hahn and George Hoffman.

It was reported that the association does not make prices, but is organized for the protection of its members to get fair treatment from wholesalers and to regulate credits.

The business men of Wilmerding recently formed a Board of Trade.

BIG CONCERN CHANGES SELLING TACTICS.

Will Sell Hereafter by Demonstrating in Model Stores.

Whoever says there is nothing new under the sun has not heard about the new methods of selling just adopted by the National Cash Register Company. Now when a grocer is interested in buying a register he is taken to a branch office of the concern where model stores have been put in. The grocer is shown into a small model grocery store. The butcher enters a small model butcher shop. All lines of trade that use a cash register are represented in these small stores.

The sales agent for the cash register company asks the merchant to go behind the counter just as if he were in his own store. The salesman buys something, pays for it and shows the grocer what to do with the money when he has a cash register.

He also buys something on credit and pays money on account. In fact, he takes up all transactions that would happen in an actual store and explains to the merchant how to handle them in connection with a cash register.

This method has been called the most startling and attractive change ever made by this well-known concern. It is certainly a unique idea and the results obtained so far indicates that it is going to be a great success.

Very great interest is also being shown in the window demonstrations run in connection with the idea of selling in model stores. In the windows of branch offices, small stores are shown with one of the 533 different styles and sizes of National Cash Registers in use. Two men carry on the transactions that take place in a retail store, one of the men acting as a customer and the other as a merchant.

The National Cash Register Company are firm believers in window display advertising and have always had attractive displays in the windows of branch offices, but this latest novel idea of carrying on actual store transactions in windows is the most successful of all.

The Turkey's Last Request

We shouldn't be surprised any day to hear of a turkey leaving as his last request to be seasoned with Stickney & Poor's Poultry Seasoning.

It's very humiliating for a finely-conditioned, self-respecting turkey to go to the table half ruined—either by inexpert home-made seasoning or by prepared seasoning that's worse than none.

Stickney & Poor's Poultry Seasoning isn't an artificial aid to the flavoring of poultry; it simply brings out and develops the last vestige of the fine flavor of the poultry itself. Get your customers to use it once; they'll never be without it again.

Wants Associated Grocers to Attack Short-Weight Lard

Massachusetts Association Agitating the Question of Under-Weight Lard. Biscuit Trust Says Its Goods are Packed Net Weight. President Roosevelt's Attitude Toward Parcels Post.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Cleveland, Ohio Dec. 12, 1907.

A letter received at the Ohio convention from President Humphrey, of the Massachusetts Retail Grocers' Association, contains the following information:

> I would like to make one suggestion to your convention, and that is in regard to the western packages of lard and lard compound—that the grocers of the country do condemn the practice of packing lard in gross packages instead of net, and of tins even short weight at that.
> I purchased a 50-pound tin of lard compound which only weighed 49 pounds gross, which I contend is a piece of imposition on the public, and some five-pound tins which only contained 4¼ pounds of lard.
> I believe agitation is the only means of righting the many evils the grocers have to contend with.
> yours very truly,

Last week I received the following letter, which I at once forwarded to the National Biscuit Co.:—

> Dear Mr. Green:—I want you to tell me what to do in regard to short weight on crackers and cakes. I have changed my buying from the National Biscuit Co. to Huston Biscuit, to Martin Cracker Co., to T. L. Lewis, and find no relief from either. All short. To-day I have a shipment from T. L. Lewis and have just weighed three boxes of cakes which cost 16 cents less 10 per cent.
> Vanilla Wafers marked 17 pounds weighed only 14 pounds.
> Ice Creams marked 16 pounds weighed only 12½ pounds.
> Ice Crips marked 25 pounds weighed only 21½ pounds.
> The last mentioned only cost 9 cents. I am so disgusted I will not weigh the rest of the shipment, but will wait to hear from you.
> We should have some relief from these men that hold up without any mask.

> Yours truly,

The following letter is the answer received from the National Biscuit Co.:—

> Dear Mr. Green:—Upon my return to the city, I find your letter of the 11th, inclosing copy of one that you received from F. M. Nixon, of Anniston, Ala., in which he states that he has quit buying from this company because of short weights.
> I am certainly very much surprised to receive a letter of this kind, because, as was explained to you by Mr. Green and myself, we are putting up our goods net weight as nearly as it can possibly be done.
> Just a few days ago, I made an investigation and found that our factories are all putting up their goods absolutely in accordance with our instructions, or in other words, net weight.
> I will, however, have our salesman call on Mr. Nixon the next time he goes to Anniston, and look the matter up fully.

For some time past the retail trade of the United States have looked forward with a great deal of concern as to what the President would say in regard to the recommendations of the Postmaster-General or what action he would take in regard to the proposed parcels post system.

After reading the President's message, and especially that part of it that refers to the recommendation of the Postmaster-General, we are satisfied with the position taken by the President, and feel assured that he would do nothing to influence Congress that would in any way jeopardize the retail interests, even in the smallest towns.

The following is the paragraph which refers to the matter in question:—

> I further commend to Congress the consideration of the Postmaster-General's recommendation for an extension of the parcels post, especially on the rural routes. There are now 38,215 rural routes, serving nearly 15,000,000 people who do not have the advantages of the inhabitants of cities in obtaining their supplies. These recommendations have been drawn up to benefit the farmer and the country storekeeper, otherwise, I should not favor them, for I believe that it is good policy for our government to do everything possible to aid the small town and the country district. It is desirable that the country merchant should not be crushed out.

While the president recommends to Congress the consideration of the matter as proposed by Mr. Meyer, yet he also asks Congress to do nothing that would interfere with the retailer in the small towns and the country districts.

While we are satisfied with our position up to the present time, we feel that these conditions have been brought about by the hardest work and the closest vigilance being kept on the movements of those interested in pushing this scheme for parcels post.

It is only when danger is apparent that the retailer can be awakened out of his lethargy and induced to turn his hand for self-protection.

Philadelphia, Dec. 10, 1907.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—In your issue of November 25, 1907, in your editorial column you said that the Mergenthaler Horton Basket Machine Co. never got anywhere and that they never paid a dividend. Well, I know that the company did a very large business in 1906, but this year was an off year, and yet they have done a very good volume of business.

In January of 1906 they paid a cash dividend of around $50,000, and in the following May their scrip dividend amounted to about $100,000, a great deal of which was cashed inside of six months. I know I got some of mine cashed inside of sixty days, but there has been a great deal of crookedness in one way or another, I think, as the brokers who were lauding it to the skies a few months ago are now keeping very quiet in one way about it, but they are trying to induce some of the stockholders now to sell their stock for a mere trifle, as they say they don't know what will be the outcome. I firmly believe, however, that the management lately has mismanaged it on purpose to try to freeze out some of the stockholders, as none of the brokers who were selling it up until lately want to give any information about it if they can possibly help it. So it is either going to be a big success yet or a complete failure. I can scarcely believe it can fail, as they have the machine to make the baskets and, if properly managed, can get plenty of business, as the field is very large.

Yours truly,
S. KIRKPATRICK.

Tea.

The tea market is still quiet and inactive, as befits the season, although values in all lines are well maintained. In spite of the light demand, stocks of tea seem to be in strong hands, and no concessions are being made in price. The past week has brought no development in any quarter, prices and the general situation being unchanged.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee is very steady. There is only a moderate business doing, the financial situation preventing any great activity. The Brazilian syndicate has the situation well in hand. December 1st, when their loans fell due, has come and gone, and their claim to have matters in shape so that their large surplus stock can be carried until December 1, 1908, seems now likely to be carried out. The receipts of Rio and Santos coffee in Brazil have fallen off greatly, whether naturally or as one of the syndicate plans is not certain. If the falling off is legitimate, it indicates a current crop of Rio and Santos coffee of a little less than 10,000,000 bags, which is a decrease of about 9,000,000 from the last crop. There is a disposition among the conservative trade, however, to take everything that comes from Brazil with a grain of salt. This much seems to be established, however—that the syndicate seems perfectly able to handle the inflation scheme successfully. If its success continues the trade may look for an advance in Rio and Santos coffee as the season advances. Mild coffees are steady and unchanged. Java and Mocha are unchanged and in moderate demand.

Sugar.

The sugar market is strong. In Europe, Cuba and New Orleans the raw market is higher, as reported in detail elsewhere, by reason of expected shorter crops. In New Orleans this advance has amounted to 3/8 cent from the lowest point. Cuba is also substantially higher, as is Europe. Refined sugar is unchanged as yet, but if raws keep on advancing, refined doubtless will also. In the West refined beet sugar has advanced 10 points during the week, owing to the general firmness. Refined sugar is in very fair demand, partly in anticipation of an expected advance.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week, and will probably rule unchanged on the present basis for some few weeks. Compound syrup is in moderate demand at unchanged prices. Sugar syrup is wanted for export, but not much for home trade. New molasses is coming forward, and is in some demand. Fine grades, which are scarce, advanced 2 to 3 cents per gallon during the week. Old crop molasses is dull and unchanged.

Fish.

There has been very little demand for mackerel during the week, and there will be very little until after the holiday season. Prices have shown no weakness during the week, and further advances in Norway and Irish fish seem to be expected after the first of the year. Shores are for the present cutting very little figure. Codfish is selling moderately at unchanged prices. Domestic sardines are dull and unchanged, but some holders are predicting a rather sharp advance after the first of the year, owing to short supply. Foreign sardines are scarce and very high. Salmon is quiet and unchanged.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes show no change in price, though the demand is somewhat better. Secondary markets are still about 1/4 cent below the coast. Peaches are exceedingly dull, prices being unchanged. Apricots are scarce, unchanged and dull. Currants are active and will continue so until after the holidays. Prices are unchanged. Raisins are still soft. Seeded raisins are easier in Philadelphia than in other large markets. Loose raisins are still weak and unchanged in price. Citron is in fair demand and unchanged in price. Apples are weaker and in light demand.

Canned Goods.

There have been almost no developments in the canned goods market during the past week. Tomatoes still linger around 80 cents, f. o. b., with very little demand in this market. There is some demand outside, however, and some sales at 2½ cents advance have been made during the week for other territory. Stocks of tomatoes in most jobbers' hands are low. Corn is dull and unchanged in every line. Peas are steady to firm, and in moderate demand. Some Western packers have named future prices during the week on a basis somewhat higher than last year. Peaches are unchanged, high, scarce and dull. Apples are weaker, probably by as much as 25 cents on gallons. The small line of Baltimore canned goods is unchanged and quiet. California canned goods are hardly selling at all from first hands, stocks being very light.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are scarce on spot and are quoted as high as $2.40. To come forward, however, the market is as low as $2.15. Various causes are hindering shipments. One is the fact that farmers have been demanding cash for their beans, and another the unusually large percentage of poor beans, this taking a much longer time to prepare the stock for the market. Beans will almost surely be lower within a few weeks, as the crop is large. Marrow beans are also lower, and offers have been made to come forward as low as $2.12½. California limas are unchanged and moderately active. Yellow split peas are about 25 cents per barrel cheaper, but green and Scotch, in outside markets, are quoted about 5 cents per bushel higher.

Produce.

Pennsylvania potatoes, 73 to 80 cents per bushel; York State, 65 to 75 cents per bushel; Jersey, 40 to 45 cents per bushel, demand fair to good; sweet potatoes, primes, 90 cents per basket; culls, 60 cents per basket, demand good; carrots, 35 to 40 cents per basket, demand fair; yellow onions, $1.50 per two-bushel bags, 40 cents per basket; white onions, $5 per barrel; $1.50 to $1.75 per bushel crate, demand fair to good; cauliflower, long cut, $2 to $2.25 per barrel; short cut, $3 per barrel, demand fair; Danish cabbage, $3 to $3.50 per barrel; domestic, $3 to $3.50 per barrel; Savoy, 75 cents to $1 per barrel, demand fair; white turnips, 25 to 30 cents per basket; yellow, 35 to 40 cents per basket, demand fair; watercress, 2 to 2½ cents per bunch, demand fair; horseradish, $4.50 per barrel, demand fair to good; celery, York State, 40 to 50 cents per bunch; Pennsylvania, 7 to 10 cents per bunch, demand fair; parsnips, $1.75 to $2 per barrel, demand fair; pumpkins, $2.25 to $2.50 per barrel; 60 to 70 cents per basket, scarce and good demand; oyster plants, 3 to 3½ cents per bunch, demand fair; beets, $2.50 per 100 bunches, demand fair to good; spinach, 75 cents to $1.25 per barrel, demand fair.

Butter.

The butter market continues to advance. The receipts of fine, fresh butter are still very small, being hardly enough, in fact, to supply the demand. Fine prints are especially scarce and command a premium above the regular market. Held creameries are in good supply and good demand, on account of the short supply of fresh butter. Under grade fresh and held creameries are quiet and in ample supply. Ladle packed and dairy grades are in light supply and very little demand. The prospects are for an advancing market on fine fresh butter until the first of the year.

Eggs.

Fresh eggs are still very scarce, and the demand is greater than the supply. A premium of 2 to 3 cents above the market is being paid for really fancy fresh stock. Most of the eggs getting in are under grades. Fancy spring packed storage eggs are in good demand at present market prices. Stocks of storage eggs continue large and holders are making every effort to move as many as possible before the first of the year. The prospects for fresh eggs are still unsettled, depending entirely on the weather.

Cheese.

The cheese market has advanced during the past week. Most of the trade are allowing their stocks to run low, and are now in the market for supplies. September cheese is especially fine and commands a high price. Late-made cheese is still in large supply and has to be sold at concessions in order to move. Early-made cheese is in light supply and firm. It is selling very close to September prices. The trade look for a healthy market from now on until the opening of the new cheese season.

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for e right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" id contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried veral, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, obably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of win-w-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window splays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are rhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an erage price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement ould be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If awings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink ot pencil).

Provisions.

There has been no material ange in the provision market ring the week. No change has curred in skinback, regular or cnic hams, though picnic hams e very scarce. Pure lard shows material change from last eek, though some holders are oting an ⅛ of a cent off. Com-und lard is unchanged. The de-and for lard is good. Dried beef unchanged, light demand. Bar-l pork unchanged and fair de-and. Canned meats firmer, rough scarcity, price unchanged yet. Bellies and bacon seem a ifle weaker.

Nuts.

Peanuts, green, choice, 4¼ cents r pound; fancy, 5 cents per und; jumbo, 6½ cents per pound; asted, choice, $1 per bushel; ncy, $1.25 per bushel; jumbo, 1.50 per bushel, demand fair; monds, 19 to 20 cents per pound; razils, 11¾ cents per pound; fil-erts, 10¾ cents per pound; pecans, 11 cents per pound; walnuts, mar-bots, 13 cents per pound; grenobles, 12 cents per pound, demand fair.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Sugar.

The raw market is higher. Three hundred and fifty tons Porto Rica sugar, the first of the new crop, were sold at 3.85 cents. Thirty thousand bags old crop Cubas brought the same figure. Both of these lots were for prompt shipment.

Owners now want higher prices. The few thousand tons of old Cubas remaining in the island are strongly held and the planters have hopes of starting their 1908 season from a higher level than was thought would prevail. Advancing markets in Europe have had their effect here, adding strength, imparting new confidence, and the result has been the obtaining of more money for the sugars carried. Europe believes her beet crops have been over-estimated. The weather hasn't been suitable and the beets being worked show some deterioration. Continental traders and speculators expect that the statisticians will reduce their figures in regard to the out turn and they are marking up quotations on that basis. A week ago their price was 3.97 cents and had been holding steadily at about that level for some time previous, although we had been making constant declines and general sugar news was not of a very re-assuring nature. Europe, because of a reduction her crops are expected to suffer, has advanced 9 cents per 100 pounds. It would seem as though there is some basis for this advance, the beets are being worked, the sugar extracted and information as to weight, content and condition is a matter of exact knowledge in many of the districts. If it shall prove that deterioration of the roots has spread over an extended area, the loss in sugar tonnage would be considerable, and we might then look for much higher prices. However, as far as the crop work has gone there need not yet be any great apprehension. The first estimates of the European output predicted a total almost equal to that of the crop of last year. Europe can afford to lose a little and then have enough for all needs. This new development has been a good thing for our market. We have made declines beyond all reason. Conditions were somewhat mixed, with the marketing of the domestic beet and Louisiana cane crops and the extra difficulties attendant upon that marketing this year, but the sacrifices made were greater than necessary. We've had something now to brace up the situation, can do business for a month or five weeks on a surer basis, and get a little profit out of the small stocks that remain to be disposed of. It will be time enough for the price cuts when the arrivals of Cubas commence, about the fifteenth of next month. There will be reason for declines then, but there is no need of stopping business and losing advantage of the better and improved conditions that have been brought about and are to prevail in the meantime. There are only a few raws left. The refiners will want them. The country needs refined, the dealers' stocks have been very low, refined is cheap, there is 5 points gain in the contracts placed a few days ago, and it is all right to go on and do business up to the close of the season; no boom, but a recovery from the depression and "hard times" atmosphere, which, were they to last, would soon become real. It will be a welcome change for all of us.

Refined Sugar.—The American Sugar Refining Co., Howell and Arbuckle quote basis of granulated, 4.70 cents, less 1 per cent. cash. The Federal's price is 4.60 cents, less 1 per cent. A good business has been transacted in new contracts. Withdrawals are fair. Shipments are being made promptly.

Baltimore Canned Goods.

No. 1.

Pessimism is giving way to optimism slowly, but none the less surely, in the canned goods market here. As the canners in this section were among the first to feel the effects of the depression in the merchandise markets, as a consequence of the money panic, they may be the first to experience the return of the activity and good feeling which cannot be stayed. Our bank friends are again commencing to loan money on canned goods as collateral, and that is the best feature in the situation. Whenever the money lenders recognize the fact that canned goods have an intrinsic value, the jobbers can safely take their cues from them. Holders of tomatoes feel much encouraged this week because trading in that article has been resumed, and some medium-sized lots have changed owners during this week. There may be no rush to buy tomatoes, nor any other line of canned goods, for some little time to come, but shrewd buyers will be quick to act when they feel reasonably sure of their ground. The month of December is usually one of the dullest in the whole year, and there is more reason for it this time, but the character of the buying of small quantities of assorted canned goods frequently repeated seems to be proof, in advance of its coming, that the market is in good shape for improvement after the New Year is fairly started.

Thos. J. Meehan & Co.
Baltimore, Md.

No. 2.

In going over the market we find the quantity of No. 3 standard tomatoes for buyers' labels, obtainable at 80 cents per dozen, very light.

There is some little buying of tomatoes from day to day. Nothing heavy, but apparently enough to keep the market from declining further. The present depressed state of affairs does not seem to deprive holders of tomatoes of their confidence in the future of the market. The fact is that most of them are in good position to hold the goods they have left. The year 1907 has been a good one for packers in this section, and while the exact figures as to the holdings are not available, it is very doubtful if the entire stock left in first hand is more than 10 per cent. of the entire pack. As far as Baltimore City proper is concerned, the percentage of the pack on hand, we think, is even smaller than this. Reports coming in from quite a number of jobbers indicate that no large stocks are being held throughout the country by the jobbing trade. Without making any predictions, it is pretty safe to look forward to some good buying of tomatoes after the turn of the year.

The low prices being quoted on Baltimore pack oysters is stirring up some little, though not very much, business.

Thos. G. Cranwell & Co.
Baltimore, Md.

No. 3.

With the monetary situation somewhat improved and the prospects of more ready money, a relaxation of the hoarding grasp and general improvement probable in the near future, tomatoes are again looking up and the general feeling is decidedly better than it has been for some weeks past. There has been an exceptionally good demand for 3s standard tomatoes, country packed, for buyers' label, and owing to the extremely light stocks of goods remaining in packers' hands and only a small percentage being adaptable to buyers' label, as it is a custom with the packers to label practically all their goods before cold weather sets in, it is exceedingly difficult to locate buyers' label lots under 82½ to 85 cents. Quite a bunch of bids at 77½ cents, f. o. b. for packers' label have been turned down and the number of sales have been made on a basis of 80 cents, offerings at this price are considerably lighter than they were a week ago and the tendency is upward just as quick and as fast as the financial wheels begin to run more smoothly.

As 2s tomatoes are scarce, there is considerable interest shown in this size; reports indicating that they can be bought at 60 cents, f. o. b. cannot always be verified, although in some cases, this has been a lever in obtaining 62½-cent offerings on this basis. 10s, or gallons, are held at $2.65. Extra standard 3s are difficult to locate for buyers' label.

The corn market has not shown improvement in keeping with tomatoes and stagnant conditions continue to prevail, with few inquiries and little business during the week. Southern Maine style can be obtained on the basis of 65 cents, f. o. b. factory, while shoepeg is offered on the basis of 72½ cents for standard and 85 cents for fancy grades, under wrapper label.

Imported Fish Products.

The trade in all kinds of salt fish continues dull and featureless.

Holland and Scotch herring are plentiful and prices are in buyers' favor.

Irish herrings are in short supply and in good demand at full prices.

Norway herrings in fairly good supply and in very good demand, owing to the particularly fine quality and the low prices prevailing.

Irish mackerel are scarce and in hand-to-mouth demand.

Norway Mackerel.—Dull, but very firm. Holders are making no concessions and are looking for higher prices. Stocks are very unimportant, and a half ways fair demand will clear all the stocks that are available of Norway mackerel; consequently no lower prices can be looked for this season.

Imported Oil Sardines.—There is no change.

The first shipments of new French sprats has arrived to-day and the quality is very nice. Fish are small, and although business in general is rather quiet, arriving lots are taken up freely by buyers who are without stock.

Buying in general in our lines has been very limited and it is our opinion that when the demand comes again after the turn of the year, our wholesale grocers will find themselves with very little stocks on hand, and when they will be obliged to buy, they will have to pay full prices to get what they want, as almost everything in our line is scarce, and this scarcity cannot be relieved until new catch and new crops come in, which cannot be looked for for some little time yet. There is excellent outlook for a good spring business.

Spices.

The market shows more activity. In our opinion, higher prices must rule after the turn of the year. There have been few import orders placed during the last thirty days, and stocks are gradually diminishing. When the scarcity prevails, a firmer market will prevail.

Pepper.—Prices are practically unchanged. The demand is very fair. We look for a slowly rising market.

Cayennes.—Demand fair and prices are lowest for years.

Cloves.—Prices practically unchanged during the week. Receipts at Zanzibar indicate an unusually large crop.

Pimento (Allspice). — Very steady, and it looks to us like this spice should advance.

Mace.—Demand at this season large. Prices are steady, but unchanged.

Nutmegs.—In better demand. Prices continue lowest on record and are safe at present market value.

Cassias.—Getting scarcer; demand somewhat larger. Prices are steady and firm.

Gingers.—Demand good at steady prices. There has been little or no change of note.

Seeds.—Mustard seed steady. Caraway slightly easier. Poppy is unchanged and celery remains firm. Coriander is in fair demand at unchanged prices.

Rubbed sage and sweet herbs are selling well.

MARKET NOTES.

Salad from Florida commands $1.50 to $2.50. The quality at the higher price is very fine and the demand is good.

Hot-house radishes seem to be wanted at $3 to $3.50 per 100. The quality is very fair.

Florida tomatoes are also higher—$4 to $4.50 for the finest, though there are some about at $2.50 to $3. The latter, however, are poor. California tomatoes are about out. Hothouse fruit ranges from 25 to 30 cents and are selling well.

Long Island cauliflower ranges from $2.25 to $3.50 per barrel and is in fair demand. Some very good cauliflower is on the market.

Florida eggplants are not popular just now. The price averages $2 per crate.

Florida beans show an advance over last week. The present quotation is $2.50 to $3.50. The demand at the advance is good, on account of fine quality.

New Bermuda potatoes are selling at a reasonable price—$5.50 to $6.50 per barrel. The quality is good and the demand fair.

Florida peas average $3.25 per basket. The quality is fine and the demand active.

The first few strawberries are in market and average $1 per quart. The quality is fair, but there is no special demand as yet.

Although there is some accumulation of Florida oranges, the finer grades still command $4 per box. Other grades can be bought as low as $2.50.

Florida grapefruit are firmer by about $1 per box. The present range is $4 to $6 per box, due apparently to nothing but increased demand.

Florida tangerines are high—$4 to $5 for full-sized box. The demand is good.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

XXII.—Tying Theory Round Your Feet.

An ounce of practice is worth more than a pound of theory.

While theories are valuable, the man who goes no further than theorizing accomplishes very little in these times, when the men who do things are in such great demand.

The theory is necessary, for the man who works without it is working under the disadvantages of darkness. The theory brightens the way of the worker, but the theory man of to-day, no matter what line of work he takes up, must also be a worker. He must be able to demonstrate his theories or they are generally put down as of little value.

The practical man has learned all he knows by dear experience, and what he knows he knows well. His great troubles are his limitations. Take him into fields outside of past experience and he is a timid investigator, for he is accustomed to basing every action on precedent.

The theory man, on the other hand, is always trying to break away from precedents and tries to accomplish better results in an easier way. He is necessary to progress, and is probably just as important a factor in the world's doings, but it must always be borne in mind that no amount of theory is of any value unless a practical man puts it into practical use.

If you have a theory, be practical enough to demonstrate its value. Do not be satisfied with it as a theory. Go ahead and make it a fact. Show it to be practical and then you have accomplished something, and have something more than a dream to satisfy you. F. A. P.

Trading Stamp Company Can't Use Girl's Photograph.

A New York photographer, having taken a picture of a young woman, turned over a few copies of it to the Sperry & Hutchinson Co. to be displayed as an advertisement in the window of that concern. The young woman sued the trading stamp company for damages, alleging that the display of her likeness in connection with this catchpenny scheme had "humiliated" her, "made her nervous," and "upset her," and that her friends had found amusement in her discomfiture. She was awarded a verdict of $1,000.

It is naturally easy to criticise an advertisement that has produced results; it is a good advertisement, of course. Still there is always the question to be considered—could it have been made to produce better results? This circular is snappy enough as to reading matter, but it could have been arranged better typographically. I should have cut down the space given to the name and address at the bottom. An inch, instead of 2½ inches, would have been ample for this. This would have left some extra space to spread through the body. Then I should have given the circular a headline. The flour line should have been moved down into the body of the advertisement, and a headline, something like: "How to Save 58 Cents," put at the top. Immediately below should have gone the canned goods matter. The lines below this which now run clear across the page should have been divided into half, and a line or two of reading matter added to each. For instance, under the cranberry line, which, by the way, is not spelled "cramberry," might have appeared something like this: "Perfect, ripe, juicy berries, splendid for sauce." This sort of stuff helps along a sale and it ought to be used wherever possible. Don't try to set a whole advertisement in display type, and don't set display lines in capitals throughout.

Home Sugar Production Over Five Times as Great as Nine Years Ago

Report of Secretary of Treasury Shows Enormous Strides by Our Own Business of Making Sugar. The Year's Meat Inspection. Work of Federal Food Law.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
December 13, 1907.

I have obtained the usual advance sheets of the annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture, and find considerable therein, touching various phases of the food crops and investigations into the food supply, to interest the grocery trade vitally.

Each year the report makes it more evident that our own beet sugar industry is destined to become one to reckon with in the very near future. [Already home grown and home refined beet sugar is sold in practically all parts of the United States except certain portions of the South.—Ed.] The following is given to show the growth of the industry in a nutshell:—

> The beet sugar industry in this country had not advanced beyond experiment and given promise of prominence until about 1888. Since that year it has rapidly grown, under aid and encouragement from the Department of Agriculture and the experiment stations and with favorable legislation by Congress and several State legislatures.
> About 560 short tons of beet sugar were made yearly from 1879 to 1887; in 1891 the quantity was 6,000 short tons; in 1892, 13,460 short tons; in 1893, 22,344 short tons; in 1897, 45,246 short tons; in 1899, 81,729 short tons; in 1901, 184,606 short tons; in 1903, 240,604 short tons; in 1906, 483,000 short tons; and in 1907, 500,000 short tons.
> Sugar factories occupy a belt across the continent in the sugar beet zone and a belt from Washington to Arizona along the Pacific coast. From the easternmost factory in Western New York they extend through Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, Montana, Colorado, Utah and Idaho, and from Eastern Washington through Oregon and California to Southern California and Arizona.
> In sixteen States there were sixty-four factories in 1906, with a capacity of working 49,500 tons of beets daily. Factories with more than three fifths of this capacity are situated in the Western Division of States, and in that region this new crop has so well established itself and the growing of sugar beets has proved to be so remunerative that sugar beet farms of the medium sort increased in value $42.49 per acre from 1900 to 1905, as determined by special investigation by the Department of Agriculture, or from $99.47 per acre in 1900 to $141.96 in 1905.
> To the fostering of this industry by nation and States, to the instruction provided by the Department of Agriculture, by experiment stations, and by agricultural colleges it has responded by increasing the value of its production 543 per cent. in nine years. The factory value of the refined sugar made in 1899 was $7,000,000 and in 1907, 45,000,000. More than $60,000,000 is now the value of the beet sugar farms and factories.

The Department of Agriculture is confident that the meat inspection law has been a good thing:—

> The Federal meat inspection has been greatly extended and improved under the new law of June 30, 1906, and is now on a higher plane than ever before. Public confidence, which was unsettled by the agitation of the previous year, has been restored. The important matters of sanitation of slaughtering and packing establishments, preparation of meats and products, use of chemicals, preservatives, etc., and prevention of fraudulent labeling are now controlled and regulated, whereas formerly the Department had no authority over them, but was practically confined to an inspection before and at the time of slaughter to determine the health of the animals. The interstate transportation of meats and meat food products is also now under control.
> Naturally a very marked increase has occurred in this branch of the work, as compared with the preceding year. Inspection was conducted at 708 establishments in 186 cities and towns during the fiscal year 1907, whereas in 1906 the corresponding totals were 163 establishments and 58 cities and towns. The number of employees engaged on meat inspection July 1, 1906, was 981; on July 1, 1907, this force had been increased to 2,290.

As to the delay in bringing cases under the food law, and also the work of the law in general, the department has this to say:—

> Although up to the 1st of July no actual cases had been instituted in the courts under the food and drugs act, the moral effect of it was apparent in every branch of trade connected with the food industry. One of the most gratifying features of this preliminary activity has been the almost unanimous support accorded by the trade to the principles of the law. In most instances manufacturers of food products, as well as dealers therein, have expressed their cordial support of the act and offered their hearty co-operation in securing its execution. The importance of this fact cannot be overestimated, since the difficulty of enforcement, if the entire trade was opposed, would be practically insuperable. Supported, however, not only by public opinion, but also by the active collaboration of producer and consumer, the food law will have that moral support which is absolutely necessary to secure more wholesome and properly branded food and drug products for the market.
> Food and drug inspection laboratories are now established, or are being installed, at New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, New Orleans, San Francisco, St. Paul, Detroit, Savannah, Seattle, Buffalo, Kansas City, Denver, Galveston, Portland (Ore.) and Cincinnati. Others will be established as the work requires.

These laboratories examine the imported samples taken at the port of entry and the interstate samples sent in by the inspectors, referring violations of the law and doubtful cases to the Washington office for action, and releasing those found to be according to law.

In nearly all of the laboratories of the Bureau of Chemistry important research work bearing on practical problems in the analysis of foods, drugs or cattle foods is in progress, the elaboration of new methods and the improvement of those in use being of the greatest importance in the examination of products under the law. Investigations illustrative of such researches, are as follows: Work on the composition and adulteration of flavoring extracts and methods for their analysis; the effect of cold storage on fowl, game, milk and eggs, in which work the bacteriological chemists play an important part; the study of canning products, such as canned corn, tomatoes, peas, catsup, etc., with special reference to the use of preservatives, including both factory inspection and laboratory experiments; methods for detection of the artificial coating of rice; a study of American honeys, involving the chemical analysis of 112 samples and the microscopical examination of the pollens found therein; an investigation of the ice cream and milk supply of Washington, D. C., in the course of which about 800 samples were examined from both a chemical and bacteriological point of view; and an analytical and microscopical examination of American cattle foods as found on the market, including 365 samples.

The death of William A. Havemeyer, the president of the American Sugar Refining Co., usually spoken of as the Sugar Trust, removes a gigantic figure in the sugar business of this country; in fact, the dominant figure. Mr. Havemeyer was the Sugar Trust, that is agreed to by all who knew him. He absolutely dominated the Trust in all of its actions and has been repeatedly cited as the greatest instance of purely one-man power in the United States, greater even than that of the Standard Oil Co. under John A. Rockefeller. For Rockefeller drew men around him and committed much of the detail work to them. Havemeyer, on the other hand, was the whole thing. He knew every phase of the sugar business, the growing, the buying, the shipping, the manufacturing and the selling, and he ruled all phases. It was he who dictated all changes in price, all changes in policy and who made all arrangements with the trade. Nobody connected with the Sugar Trust had any authority, excepting in his own narrow groove, when Mr. Havemeyer was on deck. The removal of such a man will doubtless prove a heavy loss to the Trust, though he had his faults. He had a very arbitrary temperament for one thing, and consistently pursued a policy of secrecy concerning the doings of his company which doubtless secured for it much public enmity. In some cases this policy of secrecy has led the man to pay large sums of money rather than divulge certain of the affairs of the corporation. Even the concern's own stockholders were to a great extent shut out from much of the information due them as members of the company. As to this, Mr. Havemeyer's idea was that all the stockholders wanted was good dividends, hence he saw to it that they usually got them. Perhaps one of the most noteworthy acts of Mr. Havemeyer was his statement before the Congressional Committee several years ago that "the tariff was the mother of trusts."

The unusually wide difference between the price of fresh and storage eggs is producing an assortment of more widely differing retail egg prices than I have ever known before. Good, fresh eggs to-day command 40 cents at wholesale, and they are scarce at that. The finest storage eggs can be bought at 19 to 20 cents, which is a most remarkable difference and one which very seldom obtains. This difference between the two grades of eggs gives the retail dealer a better chance to sell storage eggs at a profit than he has ever had before. He can't sell fresh eggs for less than about 45 cents to make a profit, which gives him a latitude of all the way from 20 cents up to 45 cents to sell storage eggs, and still be below the price of fresh. And the retailers are taking advantage of it. Some who want to make a drive are selling storage eggs at 25 cents, and from this the price runs all the way up to as high as 40 cents a dozen, the latter being the finest storage eggs, carefully candled. Naturally the latter price pays a much larger profit than the retailer is accustomed to make on eggs, provided he has bought his eggs right. In some cases the wholesale dealers are making the profit themselves, selling candled storage eggs at a price between 30 and 40 cents per dozen.

THE JOBBER.

Heavy California Lemon Crop.

Every indication points to the fact that this season California will have the largest lemon crop that has ever been known in the history of the State. Although there are no definite figures as to the amount of lemons shipped out of California last year, about 4,000 cars would cover the shipments during the year ending November 1, 1907. The lemon crop has averaged about this much for the last two years. A 50 per cent. increase, which is expected, in the crop would mean 6,000 cars of lemons out of California this season.

The Old, Old Way

The DRIED BEEF Business as It Used to Be

Every grocer sold a little dried beef, little enough, but still a little. If he chipped it as he sold it, the cost of his wasted ends reduced his profits to zero. If he handled ready-sliced meat, the sales were smaller yet and the business unsatisfactory. Either way a temper-trying, profitless, undesirable business, tolerated with indifference.

The New Up-to-date Way

Only one progressive grocer in the town equipped with Johnson's "EVERSHARP" slicer. His offering of sliced beef a wonder and a revelation—full size slices, thin as paper, smooth as glass, soft, moist and delicious, freshly cut every morning, wins the steady patronage of every housekeeper that sees the beef. Families that used a quarter pound once a month, now buy a half pound of this splendid beef two or three times a week. The old-fashioned machines are consigned to the junk pile. The wholesale dealer in ready-cut beef takes his wagon off the route and finally gives up the business. The town consumes more than ten times the quantity of dried beef it ever did before, and one store sells it all. While the proprietor, secure from competition, smiles a glad, happy smile as he thinks of the increased business, greater profits, and freedom from trouble and waste that goes with this patent-protected monopoly—JOHNSON'S EVERSHARP SLICING MACHINE. Give this machine one month's trial, if it don't make good send it back. Send for a sample of our sliced beef and see the world's best.

A. W. JOHNSON, New Brunswick, N. J.

The Boozer in Business.

It's really a remarkable thing, when you think about it, how generally the fellow who boozes is handed a lemon nowadays.

I'm talking about business, now, entirely.

Take it on the road. Why, I can remember when it didn't make a mite of difference to a salesman's standing whether he hit it up or not. As a matter of fact, a great lot did hit it up. You'd hear somebody say of a fellow: "Yes, he drinks a lot, but he's a crackin' good salesman."

And he would hold his job year after year, drunk first quarter the time, then half the time, next three-quarters and finally all the time.

You can't find that to-day, not once; no, sir, not once. Nobody's got any time for a boozer. Everybody's too busy hustling, and the fellow who stops half a dozen times a day to liquor up is way behind in the race.

And out of a job the minute his house gets on to it.

I went to a certain hardware jobber about a month ago, to help get a place for a friend of mine who had had to give up a first-class road job about six months before and go away for his health.

I told my little story.

"Oh, yes, I know —— ——," said the hardware man, "and I'd like to put him on, for we've got a weak man in that territory. But I wouldn't have him here at any price unless he's stopped drinking."

I couldn't say he had, for he hadn't. The jobber shook his head very positively.

"Sorry," he said, "I won't have a man who drinks working for me anywhere. You never know what they're going to do or when they're going to do it."

Twenty-five years ago that salesman would have got that job instantly, without a thought of whether he drank or not.

There's a retail grocer going through bankruptcy in an inland Pennsylvania town that needn't have gotten into the muss at all, in my judgment.

His credit got in a very ticklish condition. Still, not so ticklish that he couldn't have pulled through. It all depended on his creditors. They were in shape to shut him up any minute, or let him go ahead, just as they liked. He had a good business, and enough assets to tide him over with some good careful steering. The heaviest creditor was a small jobber in the same town.

This retailer was a boozer. Right in the midst of his squeeze, instead of letting it alone and doing his blankdest to pull things through, he would hit it up—hit it up, hit it up. One day when he was about quarter drunk he was figuring up his check book and made a mistake of a hundred dollars, so that his deposit seemed to be that much more than it was.

Against this wrong balance the retailer drew a check in favor of his local jobber that was about $40 within the wrong balance and $60 too much for the right balance. And that very minute, mind you, he had enough checks and cash in his clothes to have deposited to make the check good, if his head had only been clear enough to subtract right in the beginning.

The check came back to the jobber marked "not sufficient," the jobber got up in the air and came down on him, followed by all the other creditors, and my friend woke up from his hiccups to find himself in the Bankruptcy Court.

Never needed to have happened at all!

The boozer's been tolerated a good many years. People sort of overlooked it, if he had any real strong qualities, as a kind of amiable weakness.

They don't overlook it in business any more. You let a fellow get a reputation for boozing a bit and he might as well not ask for anything, for he won't get it.

Nobody wants anything to do with him. Nobody wants to buy goods of him or to sell goods to him, except for cash.

Nobody'll give him a job, if they know he drinks. In fact, some of the bigger establishments who use thousands of men have cards up reading: "No man who uses intoxicating liquors in any form will be given employment by this house."

And if he starts in to drink after he's got the job they'll take it away from him if they find it out, no matter how good he is otherwise. One good, sharp warning, never over two, and then out he goes.

It's a case of general suspicion and distrust.

Only the other day I was standing in a Front street wholesale grocery house. A broker whom I knew to be a pretty important fellow came in and the jobber started to kick because some goods had come in over the wrong road, involving a longer haul or something. The broker promised to fix it up.

"Now do that sure to-day, wil you?" said the jobber, "becaus we need those goods."

"Sure," said the broker, "I'll d it within an hour."

"If," observed the jobber, wit a twist to his mouth, as the broke went out.

"If what?" I asked.

"If he don't get loaded wit rum in the meantime," said th jobber. "He hits it up too muc that fellow, and you never ca depend on a man that doe that."

By gad, before I'd be a ma that nobody trusted, I'd blow th top of my old head off!

THE STROLLER.

Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is be explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to th "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and valu to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated wi appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. BRECKENRIDGE.

Mango Chutneys.

There are three recognized varieties of these Indian condiments, all made of sliced mangoes gathered before being ripe, viz., Green Mango Chutney, sour and hot, consisting of the young mangoes; Sweet Mango Chutney, moderately hot, but sweet, and Sweet Sliced Mango Chutney, composed of larger slices, very sweet and hot.

Mangoes.

The word mango is from mangga, the Malay name for the mang tree, or Mangifera indica, of which there are a great many varieties, differing in the shape, size and flavor of the fruit.

The trees usually grow 40 to 50 feet high in the East and West Indies, something like chestnut trees, and are cultivated in most hot climates.

The fruits, mangoes, are of pear or kidney shape, resembling the plantain, orange colored, and almost covered with small black spots when ripe, and varying in size from a hen's egg to that of a goose. Each fruit contains a large flat ston with a nutritious kernel inside.

Some kinds of mangoes are fibr and inferior, with a flavor of tu pentine; but the best are very lus cious, pulpy, and cut like apples.

Maracaibo Coffee.

A South American variet grown in Venezuela, at the Nort of Brazil. New crop reaches Lon don in July.

Maraschino.

Sometimes spelt Maraskino, o Marasquino.

A popular bitter-sweet liquo now made in Italy and other place but originally in Dalmatia, aroun Zara, from the small black delicatel flavored wild cherry, peculiar t that region, known as the Maraq ques or Marasca cherry.

The fruit and kernels are crushe together, one part to a hundred o honey added, and the whole fe mented.

The juice is then distilled and rec tified, sugar and water and some times more honey being added t flavor it.

Fraud Indictment Against Sears, Roebuck & Co.

Chicago Mail Order House Indicted by Federal Grand Jury For Using Mail to Defraud. Sold Paint Containing No White Lead and Jewelry Without the Jewels It was Said to Contain.

The greatest interest has been aroused over the fact that the Federal Grand Jury for the Des Moines, Iowa, district has found several indictments against Sears, Roebuck & Co., the Chicago mail order house, on the charge of selling goods through the mails under false representations.

The prosecution was brought about by the Iowa Retail Merchants' Association, which has been laying for the Chicago mail order house for a long time. The indictment contains three counts, in all of which gross misrepresentation of certain goods is charged, not only through the concern's catalogue, but through circulars, pamphlets and other business literature.

The first count covers a sale of paint made by Sears, Roebuck & Co. on the representation that "all our paints contain white lead made in our own great paint factory under the supervision of the finest paint experts. They have given universal satisfaction and we are able to place over them our most liberal guarantee, which you are doubtless familiar with."

The charge is that Sears, Roebuck & Co. had no paint factory of their own, that their paint contained no white lead and was of a very poor grade.

The second count covers a ring represented to contain four pearls and four sapphires. When received it was found to contain neither pearls nor sapphires, and was in every way inferior to the catalogue representations of it. Another ring, also ordered to secure evidence against the firm, was said to contain twelve pearls and two rubies. As a matter of fact, it contained no pearls and no rubies.

It is probable that the case cannot be tried before the May term. Report says it will constitute a rather remarkable revelation of typical mail order methods, as a mass of evidence has been gathered.

The "Grocery World" wrote Sears, Roebuck & Co., upon first receiving news of the indictment, asking if they had any statement to make for publication, but none has been received up to this writing.

Most of the cucumbers on the market now are from hothouses and range from $1 to $1.25 per dozen. Florida cues are very scarce.

Manufacturers who have adopted premium schemes to create a demand for their products, have always given the premiums to consumers. Where manufacturers have offered an incentive to grocers to push their goods, the incentive has always been small. It had to be small, because no individual manufacturer could afford to give a grocer from his individual profits anything more important than a silk hat, an umbrella, etc. But when twenty or more prominent manufacturers, whose products are sold by grocers everywhere, set aside a part of their advertising appropriations to put into a fund to buy something substantial for the merchant, that something represents an article of sufficient value to make it worth the grocer's while to take a real interest in pushing the goods of the manufacturers who take this means of showing their appreciation of the grocer's services. That the importance of this matter may be plain to you, figure out the following: The Knickerbocker Chocolate Co., New York, gives you a quantity of Universal coupons with their Hasty Lunch Chocolate, Bedford and Blue Ribbon Cocoa. No better goods ever came into this market. Add these coupons to the ones you get with the products of the following firms and you will find you can save enough coupons in three months to entitle you to a first-class set of harness, a platform scale or a roll-top desk. In six months you can save enough to get a good runabout, in a year a good piano:

The American Premium Co., Philadelphia; Wrigley Manufacturing Co., Philadelphia; Franklin Baker Co., Philadelphia; the Porcela Co., Philadelphia; McCanna & Fraser Co., Philadelphia; John Scott & Co., Philadelphia; Weber & Loesch, Philadelphia; Wm. Dreydoppel's Sons, Philadelphia; J. W. Beardsley's Sons, New York; Dixon Crucible Co., Jersey City; Sea Foam Baking Powder Co., New York; Flodon Manufacturing Co., Boston, Mass.; Potter & Wrightington, Boston, Mass.

Within a month a number of other big local houses will join this enterprise. Don't you think this matter is important enough for you to push the goods of these firms? Don't you think the manufacturers who have been been first to recognize the grocer's right of consideration should have the grocer's hearty co-operation?

Question: * * *, Pa.—I rented the store property I now occupy in August, 1906. The lease made was a lease for one year, without any privilege of renewing and without any provision that the lease would renew itself if three months' notice was not given. I stayed here during the year and am still here without any change having been made in the arrangement. My landlord now wants to say that since the year expired he can compel me to remove at any time upon the giving of one month's notice. Please inform me if he is correct.

Answer.—Your landlord is wrong. When you held over after your lease had expired you became a tenant from year to year, as the law calls it, and can hold the property until August, 1908. Even then you cannot be ousted unless three months' notice is given.

Question: P. T. Williams, Newark, N. J.—A certain person of this city owed me a debt and on November 25, 1907, paid me by check. I kept the check in my pocket with several others until December 9th, when I presented it to the bank for payment. It was returned marked "insufficient funds." I am advised that I can have the person arrested and prosecute him for giving me a worthless check. Please let me know what I can do.

Answer.—You probably have no criminal action whatever against your debtor. As a matter of fact, you were negligent in not presenting the check for payment within a reasonable time after you received it. If there had been money enough there to meet the check when it was given, and the bank had failed before December 9th, when you presented it, you would lose the debt, as the law would hold you negligent in waiting so long to make presentation. You can simply sue him civilly on the check or the original debt, whichever you prefer.

Question: * * *, Shamokin, Pa.—A, a married man, holds real estate in his own name, which he desires to sell. His wife refuses to sign the deed. Is there any way in which the deed can be made good without it?

Answer.—No way whatever. In order to waive her dower rights in her husband's real estate, a married woman must join with him in the deed. Otherwise, the purchaser would take the property subject to her dower rights, and as nobody will buy a property that way, the wife's refusal to join usually blocks the sale. A had better try to conciliate his wife, as she holds the key to the situation.

ASSOCIATION NEWS

Fort Smith, Ark.

The Commercial Club of Fort Smith, Ark., has adopted the following resolution against the parcels post:—

Whereas, The parcels post will again be presented at the coming session of the Congress, supported this time by the head of the Postoffice Department; and

Whereas, We believe the measure is premature, unealled for exeept by selfish interests; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Commereial Club of Fort Smith, Arkansas, that we express our unalterable opposition to and disapproval of the Parcels Post Bill, as advoeated by the Postoffiee Department, and in faet to any and all Parcels Post Bills of any kind or character, so long as the Postoffice Department shows a defieit.

In support of these resolutions is cited the following reasons for strenuous opposition:—

The great army of retail merchants of the eountry, whose prosperity is the prosperity of all the people, have no special interest in the welfare of the express companies, but they believe, with the utmost sineerity, that an express business is not the proper funetion of the postal system whieh is not organized for that character of transportation.

It means that the retailer and his clerks must look for some other way to earn a living, and the jobber and his traveling men must go out of business. It has been universally conceded that there is no eountry so sure of peaee and plenty as one that is filled with small towns and eities. If the question of a large postal defieit is not to be considered, let Congress give the people an advantage to be enjoyed by all—namely, a penny postage.

Mansfield, O.

The Mansfield (Ohio) Retail Grocers' Association has adopted the following resolutions against parcels post:—

Whereas, Certain interests are seeking to obtain coneessions from the government whereby packages may be carried and delivered at the expense of the Government and to the detriment of the general public in that, it would congest our mails so as to interfere with the delivery of all first and seeond-elass mail matter.

Therefore, We, the grocers of Mansfield, Ohio, enter our emphatic protest against the passage of the Pareels Post Bill in any form believing it to be but elass legislation desired only by a few mail order houses to the great detriment of all legitimate retail dealers of our eountry.

Resolved, That we request our Senators and Representatives from Ohio to use every honorable means to prevent its passage.

Resolved, That we forward a eopy of these resolutions to eaeh of our Senators and Representatives and Chairman of the Committee on Post offices and Post Roads.

The Mansfield grocers have further pledged themselves to each write a personal letter to our Representative asking his co-operation in this matter.

Jorth Dakota Commissioner Wins Against Millers.

Food Commissioner Ladd, of North Dakota, has turned the ables on the millers of his State who recently secured an injunc-ion against him restraining him rom proceeding against the mill-ng companies of his State for sing flour-bleaching processes. Prof. Ladd has obtained a writ of rohibition which restrains the ower courts from hindering him ntil there is a further hearing f the matters at issue. The State Supreme Court, after listening to he arguments of the attorneys of Commissioner Ladd, granted the writ, which is returnable Decem-er 10th. The appeal was taken n the grounds that no court had he right to restrain a criminal prosecution, and that as a pri-vate individual Prof. Ladd had he right to publish the results f his investigations as to the "bleached" flour milled by the de-endants. Judge Pollock's injunc-ion prevented Prof. Ladd from doing either of these things. The writ of prohibition will have the effect of suspending the former njunction.

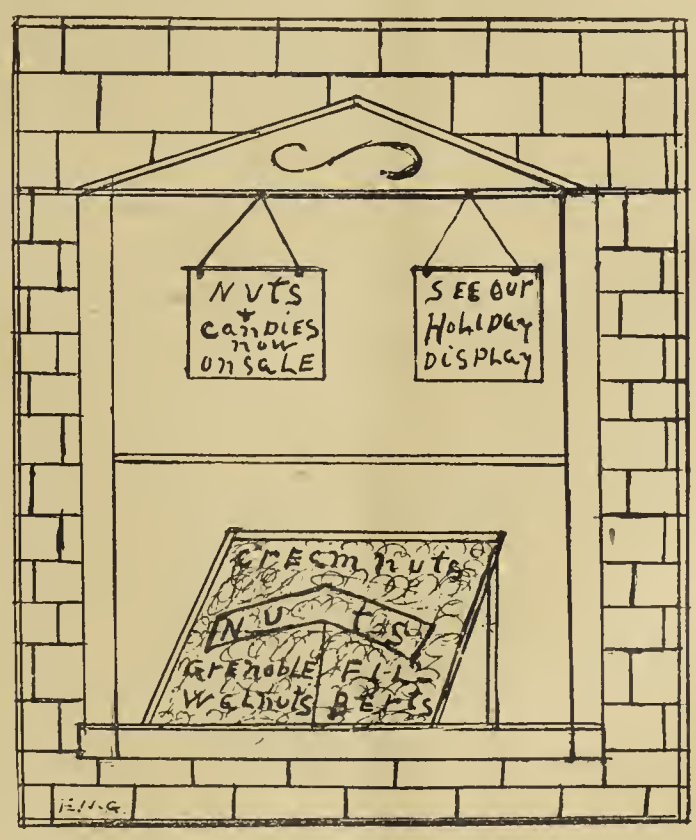
Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

A Holiday Window For a Grocer With No Bulk Window.

Kindly let me draw your attention to a fact, and one in which I have noticed in our "Window Dressing" display articles as published in the "Grocery World" each week, and that is that the displays all call for a bulk window.

There is no doubt a great many of your subscribers (I know of some) who do not have a bulk window, and, therefore, it is to these whom I wish to write and draw their attention, as to my idea of a very profitable way of using their window for a display of holiday goods, especially as this is the time of year when all grocers handle candies and nuts of all kinds.



The illustration will show you my idea exactly.

This window is not at all expensive, all you need is a few boards about, say, three to four feet long; place one end on the window sill, the other end extending from the window into the store and resting on a trestle or nailed to a strip of 1 x 3-inch board extending the full width of the boards used, and a piece of the same material supporting it from the floor as legs of a table.

The back end of the boards should be elevated about a foot higher than the end nearest the window.

The body of the window having been duly made, cover with a thickness or two of clean paper.

Then divide your floor space into as many parts as you have different kinds of nuts you wish to display (see illustration), or you might make a frame round the edge of the floor space, say, about two or three inches high and then fill the whole space with one kind of a dark nut, such as cream nuts or English walnuts, to the thickness of a few inches, just so it covers all the space so the paper will not show through. Then take a light-colored almond and outline the word "Nuts" in the centre of the window.

You can tack a small price card to a stick and place them on the different kind of nuts.

Then, again, I have seen it work like a charm; after having your floor space made, fill it with one kind of nuts and have your scales and scoops handy, so that as each customer comes into the store for nuts only, they can be waited on at once. Then is your time to give them a polite invita-

Nebraska Experiment Station Says Bleached Flours Are Harmless.

The Nebraska Experiment Station has just issued Bulletin No. 102. It contains a report of experiments conducted to determine to what extent the commercial methods of bleaching flour affect its baking qualities and its wholesomeness. The following is a synopsis of the bulletin:—

Most high grade wheat flours are more or less yellow when freshly milled. This color slowly fades when the flour is stored in a well-lighted place, but even after several months is still distinct. Formerly flour with a yellow tint was preferred, but now the market demands the whitest possible product. To meet this demand various bleaching processes have been extensively introduced into the flour mills. All the processes, however, employ the same bleaching agent, nitrogen peroxide, some producing it by electrical and others by chemical means.

Bleaching as thus practiced, neither injures nor improves the quality of flour. The color of the low grades is more unattractive after bleaching than before. No substance is added in sufficient quantities to be injurious. It is possible, however, to use such large quantities of the bleaching agent as to seriously injure the quality of the flour. However, as the use of excessive amounts of the bleaching agent likewise injures the color, and according lowers the market value of the flour, there is little danger of millers intentionally overtreating their flours.

Do You Want to Make $300 More Every Year?

It is a mighty nice thing to be able to increase your profits by such a tidy sum as $300 a year on an investment of less than $20, but that is what you can do if you will put in an Acme Peanut Roaster (equipped for kerosene, gas or gasoline), the simplest and cheapest automatic roaster made. Anybody can operate it. There is nothing to get out of order and little or no expense in running it.

Give your customers a chance to buy freshly roasted peanuts and you will make from $1 to $3 a day. We would like to tell you more about it.

ATSATT BROS.

Rae's Lucca Olive Oil

An Olive Oil of the purest quality—pressed only from perfect olives and carefully preserved from contact with anything that would hurt its exquisite flavor; beautiful to the eye and agreeable to the taste.

Do you keep it in stock?

AGENTS FOR SAMUEL RAE & CO., LEGHORN, ITALY

WE HAVE THE BEST OF REASONS FOR TALKING ABOUT IT

We make a point of exploiting the fact that you will find "The Bottom as Good as the Top" in Apelpi Evaporated Apples, simply because usually the top is very much better than the bottom. We pride ourselves on this particular brand, have built up a big demand for it on its quality alone—you can do the same thing.

HERE IS YOUR QUESTION ANSWERED

Why put in Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa when you are selling five brands now? Well, because it is different from the rest, for one reason. It is the only cocoa packed in glass. It stands alone, and you know how novelty helps a thing to sell. The grocer who infuses a little novelty into his business is the grocer who succeeds.

Another thing, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa is better than the rest. That isn't a bluff, honestly. We take out of our cocoa, in the making, a substance which other manufacturers allow in, greatly to the injury of the flavor of their goods.

Now do you know why you should sell it?

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

40 cents a pound

Packed in ½-lb. jars, 6 and 12-lb. boxes

Want to Make Your Customers Grateful to You?

Most of them have mosquitoes and most of them don't know how to drive them away. Tell them Egyptian Deodorizer will not only do that, but it will drive away all kinds of insects and at the same time purify the atmosphere, perfuming it delightfully.

You can sell enormous quantities of it. Try a case and watch the result. Save the coupons each case contains, they are worth money.

When Next You Buy Canned Goods Futures

You may be filled up with canned goods for the present, and unwilling to listen to anything about them.

But remember, when next you come to buy futures that Blue Bell and Clover Farm goods are sold on a 100 per cent. delivery contract. We sell them that way to the jobber, he sells them that way to you.

In no other way can you get any real benefit from buying future canned goods. Next year try the 100 per cent. contract and get all you bought.

If you could see some brands of rennet made, you'd never offer them to your customers in a thousand years!

Filthy, unclean and nasty! We wouldn't sell such rennet if we had to work in the streets!

James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet is guaranteed to be perfectly and absolutely clean. It's the best in other ways, too—strongest, purest and most profitable.

It makes you 100 per cent.

Some grocery stores sell two grades of print butter; others sell only one. Sometimes the one is the finest grade, sometimes a medium grade.

The point is this—that Gurnse Butter has a natural place in every store except the one that sells only one grade, and that medium. It represents the finest butter possible to make; the cleanest, the purest, the most sanitary and healthful.

It is not possible for a pound of Gurnse Butter to be bad, for the many inspections it undergoes absolutely insure the contrary. Depend on it to the limit; it will never destroy your customer's confidence in you.

Do you know how cheap Electricity is? Ever think of using it to Grind Coffee? Ask the Manager of the nearest Power House. He will post you on the convenience and economy of Electricity in your business. An will save your clerks' time, your customers' time, and advertise your store. Write for catalogue describing our various Electric Mills, with capacities for granulating from four ounces to nine pounds of coffee per minute.

The illustration shows our double mill No. 08712, with motor for direct current; one mill fitted with grinders for granulating, and the other for pulverizing. Each iron hopper holds six pounds of coffee. There are two speeds, fast and slow, which can be instantly changed from one to the other; at fast speed this mill granulates three pounds of coffee per minute. Fitted with ¾ H. P. motor for direct current, or with ½ H. P. motor for alternating current. The latter for slow speed only. Can be regulated while running for grinding either fine or coarse.

We will gladly give any information desired about these mills.

For Pickles Alone

Here is the T. & S. Pickle Cabinet, made revolving or non-revolving, as you like. Has no banana tree and is for pickles exclusively.

A handsome fixture. Solid oak or cherry, ball-bearing casters, with four three-gallon clean glass jars with covers. Dirt and insect proof and occupies only two square feet of floor space. Keeps pickles clean, fresh and inviting. A silent but effective salesman.

L&S Pickles

SUGAR OR SACCHARINE?

You can easily see the difference between L. & S. Pickles and other pickles. Eat them one after the other, or let your customer do it, and you'll have the best possible argument for the L. & S. brand.

The actual difference is this: L. & S. Pickles are not simply sweetened—they are preserved through and through with granulated sugar. This makes the inside as good as the outside, and gives the whole pickle an appetizing evenness of flavor which no other pickle has.

Many other brands are not preserved at all—simply sweetened with saccharine, a chemical imitation of sugar. This is not only harmful and forbidden by the food law but it doesn't do the work. The saccharine-sweetened pickle is simply sweet on the outside.

LUTZ & SCHRAMM COMPANY, Allegheny, Pa.

They're Tired of the Imitations

Don't you think your trade are about tired of the rainbow-hued imitation gelatine that desire for novelty has given some vogue during the last few years?

Don't you think they'd like some real gelatine—the pure, fresh, old-fashioned gelatine made of fine calves' stock, clear spring water and nothing else.

You'd probably be surprised at the eager welcome Chalmers' Gelatine would get from your customers. Try it. Granulated or shredded.

If 1000 Retailers in Philadelphia Recommended Us, Would YOU Believe in Us?

One of the hardest propositions which confront the retailer is to turn their bad debts into cash. Lots of them have tried different collection agencies, paid retaining or subscription fees and got no results; so it is hard to convince them that any one can help to bring the beats to book.

We show you how to collect your own accounts; nobody handles your money but you. We can give you the names of a thousand merchants in Philadelphia whom we have shown how to get money due them which had been charged off long before they heard of us.

It costs you nothing to find out what our plan is—can you afford not to?

To Clean the Market of Dishonest Specialty Salesmen

Newly-Organized Association of Manufacturers' Representatives Will Draw Lines Tight Around Crooked Salesmen. All Members Will Be Informed When a Man Goes Wrong. Large Number of Dishonest Specialty Salesmen in the Market.

The recently organized Association of Brokers' and Manufacturers' Representatives, which has already been discussed to some extent in the "Grocery World," has set for itself another praiseworthy task—that of cleaning the market of a great lot of shyster specialty salesmen who have been the main cause for the cavalier treatment of specialty orders by wholesale grocers.

The new association will see that no dishonest or unreliable salesman secures a second chance to victimize the trade, by having all the members notified when a salesman is detected in wrongdoing. Since nearly if not all manufacturers' representatives stationed in the Philadelphia territory have joined or will join the association, the above plan will effectually prevent a salesman who misbehaves once from securing any further employment in this market. To secure a position such a salesman would have to go to another market.

That there are a large number of salesmen who represent specialty houses and who are dishonest cannot be questioned. Often their dishonesty breaks out in curious ways. For instance a salesman employed throughout Pennsylvania by a large specialty house last year expected to be discharged at the end of the year. As a matter of fact his work had been quite satisfactory, and there was no intention of discharging him, but to save himself from his anticipated fate the salesman foolishly forged a number of retail orders from in and around Scranton, Pa. The names he signed to them were all fictitious and a minute's thought would have convinced him that a fraud sure to be instantly detected could scarcely profit him; nevertheless he sent the fake orders in and inside a week was called to the front and asked to explain them. Naturally there was no explanation and the man lost his job.

Plenty of specialty salesmen as foolish and irresponsible as this man are to-day calling on the retail trade. Often they forge the retailer's name to orders to be delivered through jobbers, but perhaps more often they get the retailer to sign himself by making all sorts of promises which they had no authority to make and which they never had the least intention of fulfilling.

It is scarcely to be wondered at under these conditions that jobbers do not always warm up to specialty orders.

Blacklist Victim Loses Damage Suit.

Grocery Customer Put on Meadville, Pa., Blacklist Sues for Damages But Loses Case. One Association Endorses Parcels Post. General News of Local Associations.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Erie, Pa., Dec. 19, 1907.

The jury in the case of William A. Thompson vs. Peter B. Graham, et. al., as the Meadville Business Men's Exchange, brought in a verdict for the defendant on the convening of court Wednesday morning.

The case has been before Judge Thomas all day Tuesday and the jury was out all night. The case has attracted considerable interest and was bitterly fought by both sides in the court.

The case was brought by Mr. Thompson alleging that the defendant has his name printed in a book, as being among those the merchants were not to trust and classed under the heading of "dead beat." Mr. Thompson alleged that the placing of his name in the book was spite work of one of the officials of the Business Men's Exchange, and as a result his reputation has been damaged, and he asked damages from the defendant.

The Retail Merchants' Association of Allegheny held its regular meeting on December 11th, when all of the retail coal dealers of Pittsburg were admitted to membership. The Allegheny Association now has 125 members.

A district convention is scheduled to be held in Lykens, Pa., some time in January, 1908, at which it is expected all of the neighboring associations will be present.

Residents of McKees Rocks have made many complaints to Burgess M. C. O'Donovan concerning hucksters from Pittsburg who have been using short measures. Ten arrests have been made by the police. The police have been inspecting quarter, half and peck measures, and in several cases found two sets of measures in the wagon. One set was correct, while the other measures were found to be short ones. The short measures were confiscated and will be burned. It is said that when apples and potatoes were measured with the short measures residents lost from 8 to 10 per cent. by the process.

Two of the editors of the Pittsburg "Leader" and two prominent local labor leaders at Pittsburg are under arrest charged with using the United States mails for the purpose of fraud in connection with an alleged lottery scheme. The quintet is charged with having been implicated in a scheme whereby an automobile valued at $2,500 was to be raffled ostensibly for the benefit of union labor. They are said to have sent out several thousands of tickets and had many more to distribute.

If all of these tickets were sold it is estimated that $75,000 would have been secured, one-half of which was to go to the "Leader" editors it is alleged.

The two organizations of Jeanette have about completed arrangements to combine in one association to be known as the Business Men's Association o Jeanette and Vicinity.

The Retail Merchants' Protective Association of Lebanon has elected the following officers: President, J. H. Cilley; vice-president, John H. Gingrich; secretary, T. J. Burkey; treasurer, S. F. Arnold; directors, H. J. Shenk, D. B. Buck, R. S. Shirey, Harvey Seltzer and C. V. Arnold. This association now has 130 members.

The DuBois Business Men's Exchange adopted the following resolutions at its last meeting:—

Whereas, The merchants of Pennsylvania has paid a mercantile tax since 1830, and the tax thus paid has maintained the Normal Schools and the charitable institutions of the State, and inasmuch as the contributors have no voice in the appropriation of this money and besides are required to pay a heavy occupation tax, we consider this tax as unjust and iniquitous; therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the Du Bois Business Men's Exchange, will refuse to support any candidate for the State Legislature who will not pledge himself to vote for the repeal of the Mercantile Tax Law now in force

The Retail Grocers' Associatio of Berks County, Reading, h elected the following officer President, A. S. Deeter; vic presidents, W. C. K. Fisher a W. F. Black; secretary, H. Aschenbrewer; treasurer, C. Esterly.

At the last meeting of t Greensburg Business Men's Ass ciation action was taken wi reference to the proposed parce post legislation. The associatio indorsed Postmaster Meyer views of this subject.

The matter of raffling off tu keys and other forms of gamblin which is going on openly Greensburg was again discusse and while the members of the a sociation favor taking acti against it they have not taken a steps yet to stop it.

Parcels Post Bill Introduced

But of Itself It Is Not Offensive. Provides for an Experimental System Small Pennsylvania District. Looks Like No General Parcels Post Law This Session.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World"

Washington, D. C.,
Dec. 23, 1907.

One parcels post bill was i troduced in the House on Thur day last. It will do no conside able harm of itself. The bill w introduced by Representative L fean, of Pennsylvania. It pr vides for the establishment of a experimental system on the rur delivery routes in York and A ams Counties, which comprise th district he represents. The b carries an appropriation $10,000.

It is understood that the leade in Congress are not ready yet t establish a general parcels po system, but a bill to provide fo an experiment will not encount much serious opposition.

Jobbers Don't Like Methods of Quaker Oats Co.

In Some Cases Refuse to Handle Any More of Their Goods or Fill Any More Orders Obtained by the Concern's Salesmen. Accuse the Company of Going After the Retailer Over the Jobber's Head. Jobbers' Position as Revealed in a Letter From a New York Wholesaler. The Manufacturer's Defence.

The question of the Quaker Oats Co's methods of doing its business are beginning to attract attention all over the country and there are signs of a revolt among the jobbers which if not checked promises to amount to something.

The jobbers complain that the Quaker Oats people are slowly but surely crowding out the wholesale dealer and by various plans are forcing themselves closer and closer to the retail trade. In this belief certain large jobbers, not of this district, but mostly of the New York and New England districts have refused to sell the products of the Quaker Oats concern.

The Quaker Oats Co., which is a subsidiary branch of the American Cereal Co., has been very attentive to the retailer for a long time. Their salesmen will call upon the retail trade, in the districts where they have agencies, about once in every two weeks. Orders are taken and turned in through jobbers chosen by the retailers. In many cases the jobber has nothing to do with the delivery of the orders; the Quaker Oats Co. even delivers. The jobber simply carries the account and for that is paid a commission of around 5 per cent.

The jobbers claim that this is a conspiracy to force them out of the jobbing business and they are resentful. Naturally the plan arouses no resentment among the retailers, since their wants are looked after by the manufacturer more carefully than by the jobber. In some cases the jobber's resentment has led him to refuse to fill any orders turned into him by the salesmen of the Quaker Oats Co. In one case the company sent a letter of protest to a New York jobber and received a reply which read in part as follows:—

> We have your communication of the 11th instant with regard to the question of our refusing to receive orders for goods taken by your salesmen from the retail trade to whom we sell groceries, and asking us if it is our wish that your retail trade salesmen shall refrain from soliciting such orders for us.
> As the matter stands at present, and on account of the policy which you pursue in the conduct of your business—which we do not presume to criticise—we desire that you shall not solicit any orders from our trade for goods of your manufacture—at least, until matters are placed upon a more satisfactory basis. There are two reasons for this: One is that you are billing direct to the better class of retail dealers your products at the same prices that you sell to us and other wholesalers, and in some instances, we are convinced, giving such retail customers the preference in making them prompt deliveries. In addition to this, and quite as important, or more important, the prices at which you sell the most salable articles on your list to the retail trade where they are to be billed through us and other jobbers, give such a small percentage of profit that no margin is left for us.
> It is very evident that your policy is to use the jobbing grocers as a convenience, and in using them as convenience you are not willing to pay them a fair compensation for the work that they do and the risk that they assume. You throw upon them a risk that you are not willing to assume yourself, and receive a service from them that you cannot yourself perform.
> The time has come now, we believe, when the jobbing grocery trade must, without exception, insist upon a manufacturer who places the larger part of his goods through the jobber working entirely with the jobber and paying him a fair compensation for his work. There is only one alternative for the jobber in this matter, and that is that unless the manufacturer will work in this way they must decline all such business.

The manufacturer who follows the above course invariably replies, when protested to about his course, that he has been practically forced into it to save himself. His claim always is that when he has asked the jobber to handle his goods, the latter has refused unless some demand was first created; that when he sent men out at his own expense to create the demand and did create it, carrying all orders obtained to the jobber who had no part in obtaining them, the jobber treated the orders indifferently and in some cases with rank discourtesy.

Manufacturer Asks Some Questions of the Jobber As to Specialty Orders

Says It is Hard to Tell Just What the Wholesaler Expects of the Manufacturer, and What the Latter Can Do to Earn the Jobber's Co-operation. Asks Point Blank if There is Any Way For the Small Manufacturer to Interest the Jobber at All.

[The following letter, written by a well-known California packer of fruits, was sent in care of the "Grocery World" to the wholesale grocer who contributed to the "Grocery World" of December 9th the article appearing under the caption of "The Wholesale Grocer's Side of the Specialty Order Question." With it came a letter to the editor of the "Grocery World" requesting delivery to the jobber, which was done. The writer was given an opportunity of reading Mr. Kingsbury's letter, and regarding it as an unusually clear statement of the manufacturer's position toward the specialty order question, requested permission of the jobber to publish it. This was granted, and the "Grocery World" reproduces the letter in full, trusting and believing that Mr. Kingsbury will not object.]

I have been much interested in reading the article in the "Grocery World" for December 9, on the "Wholesale Grocer's Side of the Specialty Order Question."

As a manufacturer of jams, preserves, marmalades, etc., which I put out under my own label exclusively, I should be interested to know the ideas of the writer of that article, on the best way a manufacturer should go to work to get his goods introduced in a territory, in case he had a limited advertising appropriation, that is, not enough to open up a large general publicity campaign to force the dealer to handle his goods, by creating a demand on the part of the consumer.

You say that the jobber does not care to bother with the specialty orders turned in by a specialty salesman, but on the other hand it has been my experience that a jobber will not take hold of a new line of goods with any great enthusiasm and push them himself even where there is a good margin of profit to him.

How then, are we manufacturers to get together with you jobbers, unless we happen to be furnished with a sufficient fund to come to you and say that we will spend a large amount of money advertising in your territory, or that we will make other large inducements to you, over and above the amount of your regular jobbing discount?

In other words, is there no show for the smaller manufacturer to interest you, even if his line of goods is a superior one? If there is a chance to do so, I think that it would be of interest to many of the smaller manufacturers to have your opinion on the matter.

The way I have had to go to work to interest a jobber is by having a specialty man, who handles my goods exclusively, work a territory and turn in his orders to a jobbing house. Then I have had my man on the ground when the car of goods arrived, and have had him personally superintend the delivery of t goods to the dealer. I have al stood behind the orders, and ha made good on all kicks receive and have taken up all cancell tions myself. That is, I have so the goods to the retailer, ha delivered the goods to him, a have only asked the jobber please accept the jobbing di count on the actual sales. Th I have generally found the jobb willing to do. Then I have aske the jobber to carry a small stoc of the goods on his own accoun to fill spot orders which my spe ialty man takes, and have gua anteed to the jobber that I wi do some advertising in his ter tory, and that I will also keep m man in the field, taking orders t be turned in through the jobber

This has built up a good bus ness for me in many different parts of the country, but I reall fail to see where the jobber earn his discount under these circum stances. What I should like t get is the jobber's side in the ma ter, what he wants to have don and what he is willing to do tha will make the deal a fair an equable one for all concerned.

Most women know Fels-Naptha so well that if they could not easily get it of your store, they would be willing to go to another.

No grocer can afford to lose one customer. Keep your stock of Fels-Naptha soap so plentiful that you will not.

Fels-Naptha is an original and unique product.

You have stated in your article what you did not want to do, and now, like Tom Lawson, it is up to you to suggest a remedy.

We manufacturers are all of a class when it comes to manufacturing goods and trying to sell sell them to the public. We have one thing which we want to do, and that is to sell as large an amount of our individual goods as we can at a profit. The jobber is the middleman in the deal, and the more we are posted as to what he wants, and as to how he would best like to have us handle the business in order that we may, through him, sell the goods, the better we can go ahead and do business.

We realize that the jobber relieves us of a lot of small retail credits, and that he enables us to ship in carload lots a number of orders at a time, and that he is thereby entitled to what he gets out of the business, and that he is the judge as to whether a dealer's credit is good or bad. We also realize, therefore, that we must do business through the jobber in order to do it economically and without a vast mass of detail work.

What we want to know, then, is how to work with the jobber to the best advantage, and from this arises my question as to whether there is a show nowdays for a manufacturer of a proprietary line of goods who hasn't a large advertising fund, but who is building up a business from small beginnings, to interest the jobber at all. You close the channel of the specialty man to us. How then are we to go to work to open up a new piece of territory to our goods, always provided that we are honest, are making a first-class article at a fair price, and are willing to stand behind our goods under all circumstances?

Do you want the manufacturer to eliminate the jobber from his calculations, leaving him the flour, sugar, soap and canned tomato trade, and in other lines doing his own jobbing and storing and going after the retailer direct, or are you, as a jobber, interested enough to be anxious to increase your business by looking carefully into the merits of the new lines that are presented for your consideration? Do we get a show from the jobber? If so, how? What is your point of view?

Canned Goods Packer Forced to Pay Up.

Interesting Law Suit Between Baltimore Packer and New York Jobbing Firm Over a Future Canned Goods Contract. Market Advanced Before Delivery and Packer Sought to Escape His Contract by a Subterfuge. Court Grants Large Damages Against Them.

There occurred in New York City during the week a lawsuit over a future canned goods contract which has attracted the attention of the trade of this entire section. The plaintiffs were Messrs. Generich & Von Bremen, jobbers of New York City, and the defendants Miller Bros., canned goods packers of Baltimore, Md. The suit was brought to recover losses due to the violation by the defendants of a future contract which they made with the New York jobbers.

It appeared that last April the New York firm contracted for 1,300 cases of seconds, early June peas, at 70 cents. In July, after examination of samples and acceptance, the goods were ordered shipped, but the packers refused to comply unless the buyers examined and accepted the goods in Baltimore or paid for them in that city before shipment. No such terms being in the contract the local firm refused, made a formal demand for the goods and was refused. Therefore it went into the market, which had meanwhile advanced sharply, and was obliged to pay 85 cents for goods to replace those it had bought of the packer. The court gave judgment in full for the plaintiffs.

The verdict gives general satisfaction to the trade, inasmuch as it establishes the fact that the packer who lies down on his contract can be punished if anybody has the gumption to go after him.

AMONG THE TRADE.

The regular annual dinner given by the McCahan Sugar Refining Co. occurred on Tuesday last. Only the Board of Directors and the local sugar brokers were present.

The Hotel Patrons' Demand

A coffee that satisfies on a hotel table is a good coffee and will stand up under any test you can give it.

That's because hotel patrons are supercritical. They expect more than they get at home; in fact they expect perfection.

Hotel Astor Coffee is the year-in-and-year-out brand of some of the most exclusive hotels in New York City. They never think of buying anything else — they wouldn't dream of it.

The success of this coffee under this exacting test is really the reason that led us to push it through the grocery trade. We have a plan to increase your high-grade coffee trade. May we tell you about it? A postal request is enough.

Absurd.

The "Grocery World" has always been willing, upon evidence furnished, to believe that the average Trust would do about anything to advance its interests. There has always seemed to be, in the "Grocery World's" view, an almost total lack of principle about commercial Trusts where it came to business measures.

But we have always believed, nevertheless, that such departures from the path of decency as the Trusts committed were dictated by shrewdness of the craftiest type. That belief makes the charge which is about to be brought against the Sugar Trust in New York seem the greatest imaginable absurdity. In a few days, probably even before these words see print, the United States Government will formally charge the Trust with tampering with the dock scales on which imported sugar is weighed, in order to reduce the apparent weight and thus reduce the amount of duty.

This accusation seems like the veriest buncombe to the "Grocery World," simply because the Sugar Trust doesn't need to do such things. The Trust absolutely dominates the sugar markets of the United States. There are a few independent refineries, and they all do a good business, up to their capacities, but the fact remains that 95 per cent. of the sugar refined in this country is refined or controlled by the Sugar Trust. Under these conditions what need has any such concern to tamper with scales? Being the largest buyer of raw sugar, and the largest seller of refined sugar, its profits are precisely what it wishes to make them. The charge will probably fall to the ground.

Make an End to Childishness.

The issue of the canned goods suit reported briefly elsewhere in this issue will greatly gratify every one who believes in reforming the present loose and unbusiness-like conditions surrounding the sale of future canned goods.

A New York house bought future peas at 70 cents. At the time of delivery the market was 15 cents higher, and the packer refused to deliver except upon a number of flimsy conditions which were not in the original contract at all. The buyer sued for the difference between 70 cents, the price at which he ordered, and 85 cents, the price at which he was obliged to go out and buy, and got a verdict for the whole amount.

This is strict justice and the "Grocery World" rejoices. For years the average future canned goods contract has not been worth the paper it was written on, partly because it was opened wide by all manner of conditions, and partly because even in case of violation the other party seldom took the trouble to defend his interests. Probably because both parties were guilty as it served their interests to be. If the market advanced the packer laid down on some pretext, and if it declined the jobber—that is some jobbers—laid down because the goods were not up to sample, or on some other equally transparent pretext. And each has permitted the other to lie down because he himself reserved the right to be guilty when it served him. It has all been very loose and childish, and the "Grocery World" looks hopefully forward to the time when a future canned goods contract will be treated like the agreements not of children but of men.

The Food Law and Tomato Slop

I'm not in the business of stirring up trouble, yet if the Pennsylvania state food law could be made to apply to some of the slop that comes here under the name of canned tomatoes, it would serve the packers right and do the whole trade good.

So far as my judgment goes, I'm not as sure as I used to be that the food law doesn't apply.

The lowest price quoted to-day on so-called standard tomatoes is 80 cents factory. Some of the goods offered at this price have no right to be called tomatoes at all; they are tomatoes and water.

A certain packer sent a broker three cans of goods like this during the past week. The broker opened them all and then disgustedly wrote the packer that all three cans didn't contain together as much real tomato as one can ought to.

Tomatoes and water.

The Pennsylvania food law provides that an article shall be considered adulterated "if any substance has been mixed or packed with it so as to reduce or lower or injuriously affect its quality or strength."

Or "if any substance has been substituted wholly or in part for the article."

Or "if any valuable constituent of the article has been wholly or in part abstracted."

All food laws contain practically these provisions, so that what I say applies just as well to other States as to Pennsylvania.

What happens when a packer half fills his cans with water? For in almost none of the sloppy tomatoes offered is the fluid portion tomato juice; it is water.

Hasn't the use of water reduced or lowered the quality of those tomatoes?

Hasn't the water been substituted for the tomato?

Hasn't the tomato pulp been subtracted and the water added?

I tell you, it's an exceedingly close question whether a dealer who, asked for a can of tomatoes, sells a mixture of tomatoes and water, is not subject to a food law prosecution.

Where is the difference between that and selling milk adulterated with water?

Or vinegar adulterated with water?

I can't see any. In all such cases the buyer is not getting what he asks for and pays for. In the case of canned goods he is peculiarly helpless, since the goods are sealed and not subject to inspection.

Suppose such a case was brought, let's consider what defense could lie.

That the goods sold were what they were represented to be—tomatoes?

Or that the buyer knew what he was buying and so was not deceived?

Or that the food law did not apply to cases where food products were diluted with water?

Not one of these would be supported by the facts. There is one thing certain—if a food law doesn't apply to such cases, no law does, and it is hard to see what law can, since it is a plain case of the wilful deterioration of food.

I should hate to see any prosecutions along this line hurt the grocer, but if they could be so brought as to soak the packer I would be strongly in favor of trying the question out. Everybody is sick of the wretched slop that some of the packers throw on the market as canned tomatoes.

Question: B. & R., Troy, N. Y.—State, briefly as possible, what are the "sidewalk rights" of storekeeper, tenant, landlord and municipality. Has storekeeper any right to lease a portion of sidewalk if municipality does not object, and which has the right to the income from such source, if there is any, the landlord or tenant? Can the landlord eject such lessee of storekeeper from his sidewalk? Has a railroad company a right to erect a flag shanty on storekeeper's sidewalk, thus obstructing his light and room?

Answer.—This question cannot be intelligently answered upon the facts above submitted. Such matters are governed at least to some extent by local ordinances which are not before the writer and can scarcely be obtained, since they are not to be found in outside law libraries.

Generally speaking, a merchant who rents a store property rents the front sidewalk with it, and may use it for the purpose of displaying goods, etc., subject to local ordinances. He may not sublet the sidewalk to other people, however, except with the landlord's consent. If the landlord consents the rental from the subletting goes to the tenant.

A railroad company is usually permitted to erect such structures as you speak of, if they are necessary, though there are limits prescribed by the circumstances of the particular case. Without knowing more of these circumstances I cannot speak any more definitely.

Question: "L.," Mt. Holly, N. J.—My mother died last May, leaving my brother and myself executors of her estate. She left one cottage in Atlantic City, being occupied by a tenant that has been renting by the year, without a lease, paying the rent monthly in advance, he subletting during the summer months. His year ends October 1st. We executors placed it in the hands of a friend to sell for us, he having some one in view that wanted to buy, but did not succeed in making a sale, and did not notify the incumbent to move. Now the incumbent says, as he was not notified to move three months in advance he expects to hold the property another year. Now, this is very much in our way. The business should be settled up in May, 1908. When we send a prospective buyer to look at the property he runs it down and uses his influence against his buying. Now, as the former owner that he rented off is dead, and the property is in the hands of the executors, can he legally hold possession to the detriment of the estate? Is he not bound to show fair and impartial treatment to prospective buyers? Can he not be held responsible for damages where it can be shown that he has done us an injury? Can he not be made to vacate and leave the premises?

Answer.—The tenant in the above case is right in his contention that he can hold the property until October, 1908, and he can be compelled to leave then only if three months' notice has been given. The death of your mother had no effect upon the relation of landlord and tenant; you as executors simply took your mother's place as landlords, and the tenant's position remained unaltered; you should have given him notice three months prior to October, 1907.

You have, nevertheless, an action in damages against your tenant for any wilful wrong he does you in attempting to prevent a sale of the property. You could not sue him for a simple expression of opinion, however, even if adverse to you. I should give him notice, through an attorney, that any further undue disparagement of the property would result in the bringing of an immediate action.

Question: Krepp & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.—Kindly let us know if this card does not comply with the ordinance passed by Councils.

Answer.—The ordinance referred to is that of March 31, 1900, forbidding the placing of circulars, dodgers, etc., in the vestibules of Philadelphia houses. The circular inclosed with the above is a business postal card, printed on the back with a grocery advertisement and on the front addressed "To the Lady of the House." A large number of local firms use these advertise-

Question: "Subscriber," New York.—To avoid the necessity of carrying liability insurance on a building or factory, cannot the owner require the help to sign a release releasing the owner from all liability in case of accident or bodily injury? If so, kindly give form of a release that would be binding in any and all cases.

Answer.—I do not consider this feasible at all. In the first place, it is a decidedly improper and inequitable request to make of employees that they sign away their rights to recover damages for their employers' negligence. Particularly since no consideration for such a valuable promise seems to be contemplated. No sane man or woman would sign any such agreement. In the second place, even if the employees did sign it no court would in my opinion hold them to it, in the case of accidents caused by their employers' negligence. There are many decisions that railroad companies cannot relieve themselves from the consequences of their own negligence by any contract with passengers. While the principles involved are somewhat different, the railroad being a public corporation, I have no doubt that the courts would take the same stand with an ordinary employer.

Retailers Will Give Food Show in Spring. Jobbers Say Christmas Trade is Below Par. American Can Co. Gets Renewal of California Trust Contract. Olive Oil Duty Dispute. Sago Squabble Still Waging. Small News of the New York Market.

New York, Dec. 20, 1907.

Preliminary arrangements have been made for a pure food show to be conducted in the Lenox Lyceum, by the New York Retail Grocers' Union, in the spring, the date to be announced later. Ten years ago this association gave a food show and it has not given any since. Fifteen years ago it had a show in the same hall, which is to be utilized this time, and cleared a profit of $12,000.

Last year a committee, headed by L. J. Callanan, had the arrangements for a show well under way when there was a hitch in getting the hall, which had been promised for the purpose, and the affair was postponed. The members of the old committee, with several additions, are acting again and Mr. Callanan has agreed to be the manager.

That the show will be a huge success goes without saying. The Brooklyn Association at its last meeting received a proposition from the promoters who conducted several food shows in the last year or two, but decided to give the New York organization a clear field this year, so that there will be no food show in the sister borough in 1908.

The Members of the New York Association are to give their time personally to the work of making the show memorable. That is one of the things upon which Mr. Callanan has always insisted—that no outsiders or professional show people are as competent to get up a really fine food show as are the grocers themselves. He promises to make the exhibit far surpass any conducted by outsiders and the members are already inspired by his enthusiasm.

It has been decided by the directors of the United Retail Grocers' Association, of Brooklyn, to start an agency for the purpose of bringing together those who wish to buy and those who wish to sell grocery stores. The details of the plan are to be worked out and made known later.

The talk among some, at least, of the jobbers is that the Christmas trade does not come up to the standard as well as the Thanksgiving trade did. It is said that the discharging of employees in various industrial centres has now begun to make itself felt in the jobbing trade in the way of reduced sales of various articles, for which cheaper substitutes may be had. One jobber gave as an instance of the trend of affairs that he is selling cheaper grades of teas and coffees on an average than he did a few months ago, indicating that many people are economizing in the quality of these products.

Importers of various kinds of fancy groceries are also noting the difference in conditions now and what they were only a short time ago. While people must eat, as the jobber is wont to observe, yet it is equally certain that they can exercise a great deal of discrimination as to what they shall eat.

The American Can Co. secured a renewal of the $5,000,000 contract by which the management will continue to supply the California Fruit Canners' Association with fruit and vegetable cans until December 31, 1912. The old contract, which will expire December 31st next, was made in 1902 by F. A. Assman, who was then president of the American Can Co. It was made for a period of five years and called for 50,000,000 to 60,000,000 cans per annum, according to the size of the crops, and involved over $1,000,000 a year. Under the contract in force, the California Fruit Canners' Association leases its factory to the American Co., which concern operates it.

An importing firm brought a quantity of olive oil into this country a year ago and the value was fixed by the local appraiser at upwards of 60 cents a gallon, thus subjecting the importation to a duty of 40 cents a gallon. The valuation was based on the market price at Marseilles, the port from which the oil was shipped here. The importers kept the oil in bond and after a time sent it to Liverpool and then brought it back to New York. Then the importers claimed that the valuation should be reduced, as prices had fallen and were not so high at Liverpool as they had been at Marseilles some months before. If the valuation was placed under 60 cents, the oil would be entitled to admission free of duty.

It was admitted that the oil was fit only for mechanical uses. The Board of United States General Appraisers decided this week that the original valuation, according to the Marseilles market prices, must stand, as it would be unwise to permit importers to resort to plans such as were pursued in this case in order to escape the duty. The importers made no effort to deceive the Government as to what they were doing, but believed that they had the right to free entry of the oil if the values fell in the manner indicated.

Among the witnesses at a second hearing, which took place Wednesday, in the sago cases before the General Appraisers, were Mr. Stein, of Stein, Hersch & Co., manufacturers of sago products. Mr. Walden, of the Corn Products Refining Co., and a number of experts from the Government's departments. The National Spice Co. and Austin, Nichols & Co., were represented by counsel.

The importers submitted testimony that the German sago, the article in controversy, is, in fact, the only sago used for eating purposes in this country, although it is made from potato starch. The sago made from the sago palm, it was said, is used entirely for starch and for sizing purposes.

The Pure Food Bureau, has, however, decided that the German sago must not be imported as sago after this and as a result of this ruling, the customs authorities are trying to collect the duty which applies to starch.

One of the importers testified that since the trouble began he had attempted to deliver real sago, made from the sago palm, in place of German sago, and now he is threatened with a suit for breach of contract. He says that sago pudding can no longer be made of sago, but must be made of something bought under another name. The importers say that for forty years they have been getting the German sago, simply as sago, free of duty, and they object to having its name changed and a duty added at the same time.

Beans, peas, cranberries and hickory nuts are to be sold by the pound after this instead of by measure by the members of the Rochester (N. Y.) Grocers' Association, a resolution to this effect having been adopted at the last meeting.

It is said that the jobbers, organized in the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, instead of refusing as a body to buy from certain manufacturers who sell also to large retailers are acting individually, but that the result is likely to be much the same as if they acted together in accordance with a resolution.

* * *

The annual dues of the New Retail Grocers' Union have recently been increased from $4 to $6 a year. The association is to hold a smoker on the evening of January 6th.

Western Packer Says Advance Prices By Pennies Instead of Nickels

Suggestion Is That in These Days of Money Stringency Retailers Could More Easily Raise Their Prices By Using Penny Advances Instead of the Old Nickel and Dime Advances.

Touching the prevalent money tightness, which has made it impossible for a retailer in many cases to advance his prices in proportion to the advances made to him, one of the large Western meat packers has issued a suggestion to the retail trade which is certainly worthy of consideration. The packer suggests that instead of jumping the retail price 5, 10 or 15 cents, as has been the habit for several years, the retailer would find it easier to advance his prices if he would move up in jumps of 1, 2 or 3 cents, as the need may require. The salient part of the packer's suggestion follows:—

For a number of years, the retail trade has been educating themselves and their customers to use goods that could be sold at even figures, such as 5 cents, 10 cents, 15 cents, etc., and the manufacturer has cooperated in this education by endeavoring to make his packages fit these even prices.

For a long time this was a convenient and practical method, but the great changes that have recently affected all cost conditions make it important that manufacturer and merchant consider the advisability of discontinuing this method.

With the tremendous advance in the cost of everything that goes into tin cans and glass bottles, and the increased cost of cans, bottles, cases and labor, it is evident that the consumer cannot continue to buy the same size package, of the same quality of foods, at the same price, as he has in the past. He must either buy a poorer grade, a smaller package, or pay more for it.

The economical and logical solution of this problem is the changing of the price of goods that formerly sold at 5 cents, 10 cents and 15 cents to 10 cents, 15 cents and 20 cents, or else splitting the nickels and selling them at 7 cents, 12 cents and 18 cents. In almost every section of this country pennies are plentiful now, and there is no reason why a product should not be sold for 7 cents or 12 cents. In the sections of this country and in foreign countries where competition is keenest and where business methods are analyzed the finest, it has been demonstrated that "odd" prices are practical and advantageous to the merchant and the consumer, and we predict that this condition will become general all over the United States.

Another important point to be considered is that with the advancing cost of goods and the necessarily increased capital required to conduct a business, with the higher cost of rent, labor, etc., the merchant must increase the amount of profit that he makes on each package of goods that he handles, and where he used to be satisfied with a profit of 25 cents a dozen on an article that cost him 95 cents a dozen, he will not be satisfied with a profit of 25 cents a dozen on this same article if it now costs him $1.25 a dozen, and he should therefore increase the difference between his cost and his selling price, thus getting a fair renumeration under present industrial conditions for the money he has invested and the labor and brains that he uses in his business.

The best way he can do this is to advance his prices on goods that he used to sell at 5 cents, 10 cents and 15 cents, and now insist upon getting 7 cents, 12 cents and 20 cents, etc., for them. We strongly urge that in selling goods to the retailer, you point out to him that he can get 20 cents or 25 cents for a glass jar of dried beef, 7 cents for a can of potted meat, 12 cents for a can of Vienna sausage, etc., etc.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market has shown a fair demand during the past week. There has been no weakness, in fact the contrary is rather the fact. The markets have closed on the other side, and the exact amount of tea which will now be available is known. Since the amount is small, the market has strengthened somewhat, and it seems reasonably certain that low grades will be higher after the turn of the year. Foochow Oolongs, among other grades, are likely to advance another cent.

Coffee.

The market for Brazil coffee has ruled very stupid during the past week, and transactions have mostly been small. As to price, the situation is practically unchanged. The receipts in Brazil continue to show a sharp deficiency as compared with last year, and are hardly equal to those of 1905. The coffee business in this country is going through the ordinary dullness as the year ends, and the general opinion is that an increased demand and higher prices will come shortly after the first of the year. Buyers are still buying from hand to mouth, as they have done for six months past, and this has made stocks in second hands less than normal. Mild coffees are steady and unchanged, and so are Java and Mocha.

Sugar.

The raw sugar market is somewhat weaker. European quotations have declined slightly during the week, and sales of Cuban sugar for early shipment also show a decline. There has been no change in refined sugar, and the demand is seasonably fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is selling fairly, only for immediate wants, however, at ruling prices. Sugar syrup is in fair demand at unchanged prices. Molasses is selling in a small way at prices unchanged from the last reported advance. Fine molasses has advanced 5 cents per gallon from the lowest point.

Fish.

The mackerel market shows a little activity and a good deal of firmness. There have been considerable sales of Irish mackerel and fair sales of Norways. It seems to be generally expected that the prices of mackerel will show an advance after the first of the year, and the business now doing is largely anticipatory. The stock of all grades is extremely low. Cod, hake and haddock are in light demand. Down East holders are talking an advance, but it could scarcely come unless the demand improves beyond its present volume. Salmon is unchanged. New red Alaska pack is now getting in and shows fine quality. Deliveries were full. Prices on all grades of salmon remain unchanged. Domestic sardines remain unchanged, with talk still rife about an advance after the first of the year. Imported sardines are scarce and very firm.

Canned Goods.

There has been little activity in the canned goods market during the past week. Tomatoes are unchanged around the 80-cent basis, and the demand is very light. The market is not weak, however, and there are predictions of an advance by February 1st. Corn is dull at ruling prices. There is some inquiry for fancy Maine corn at about $1, but the surplus is very small. Peas are selling very moderately at unchanged prices. Orders are being taken for New York State brands, 1908 pack, at prices slightly above last year. Not much interest has been shown as yet. Peaches are unchanged and unimproved. Apples are weak, with almost no demand. Probably $3 could buy New York State gallons. The small Baltimore line is unchanged and dull. Some California canned goods are selling from first hands, but not many. Where a packer has any to sell they can usually be bought at about the opening price.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are unchanged on the coast, but Eastern markets seem to be weak, owing to certain holders' desires to unload. Before a cut in price which occurred during the week, Eastern markets were already ½ cent below the coast basis; the week's declines carried prices to about ¾ cent below the coast. Peaches are dull, but still very strong. Apricots are high, scarce and inactive. Currants are wanted at ruling prices. Raisins show even more weakness. Seeded goods have now declined to slightly below the pening prices. Loose raisins re unchanged. Citron is un-hanged and in fair demand.)ates are wanted at ruling prices. 'igs, by reason of large receipts, re easy.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are about $2.25, both n spot and to arrive. The mar-et on beans to come forward has dvanced 15 cents per bushel in Michigan. Marrows are about nchanged. California limas how an advance of about ¼ cent. 'he demand for beans is fair. Both green and Scotch peas have dvanced 10 cents per bushel. 'ellow splits are about un-hanged.

Butter.

The butter market has not yet een checked in its upward tend-ncy. Fine fresh butter shows a urther advance of 1 cent per ound during the week. The re-eipts are very light, and only a ew lots are grading extra. 'ancy fresh butter is particularly carce. The make of near-by reameries is very small. Fine eld or storage creamery is higher nd in better demand. Medium-rade creamery, ladle-packed and airy butter is quiet and un-hanged. The trade look for a rm market from now until the rst of the year.

Eggs.

The receipts of fresh eggs are ncreasing and the market has de-lined 2 cents during the week. 'he increase is chiefly from near-y shipping points. A large part f the receipts are still storage ggs and are being sold at the est prices obtainable. The narket on fancy held eggs is teady and sales are active at present market prices. The pros-pects are, if weather remains favorable, for a declining market from now on.

Cheese.

The cheese market continues firm. More buyers have come into the market and prices have advanced a fraction during the week. Fancy September cheese is firmly held and holders refuse to shade prices. Later made cheese is selling fairly at un-changed prices. Part skims are in fair demand at present prices. Prospects are very good on fine cheese and higher prices are looked for from now on.

Provisions.

The provision market is dull, as is usual at this season. Smoked meats, hams of all grades, bellies and bacon are all about un-changed and in light demand. Lard, both pure and compound, is practically unchanged and in fair demand. Canned meats, dried beef and barrel pork are all unchanged and quiet.

Produce.

Jersey potatoes, 45 cents per basket; York State, 75 cents per bushel; Pennsylvania, 75 to 80 cents per bushel, demand fair; sweet potatoes, primes, 90 cents to $1 per basket; culls, 65 to 70 cents per basket, scarce and good demand; carrots, 40 to 50 cents per basket, $1.75 to $2 per barrel, demand fair; yellow onions, $1.50 per 2-bushel bag, 40 cents per bas-ket; white, $1.50 to $1.75 per bushel crate, demand fair; domes-tic cabbage, $1.50 to $2.50 per bar-rel; Danish, $2.50 to $3.50 per 100; Savoy, 50 cents per barrel, de-mand fair; horseradish, 10 cents per bunch, demand fair; water-cress, 3 cents per bunch, demand fair; white turnips, $1 per barrel, 20 to 25 cents per basket; yellow turnips, 40 cents per basket, de-mand good; celery, York State, 40 to 50 cents per bunch; Pennsyl-vania, 5 to 12 cents per bunch, de-mand fair; parsnips, $1.50 to $1.75 per barrel, demand fair; pump-kins, $2.50 to $3 per barrel, de-mand good; oyster plants, 3 to 3½ cents per bunch, demand fair; beets, 2½ to 3½ cents per bunch, demand fair; spinach, $1.50 to $2 per barrel, demand fair.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Spices.

The market is fairly active, de-mand being for immediate needs. It is evident that buyers do not want to increase their stocks dur-ing this month.

Pepper.—Prices are holding steady under a fair demand. There is little business being done in forward shipment, and cable prices are unchanged.

Cloves.—Somewhat firmer under a good demand. Foreign markets are higher.

Mace steady and in very fair demand. Prices are unchanged during the week.

Cayennes.—Demand fair; prices unchanged.

Pimento (Allspice) is steady, prices being unchanged.

Nutmegs.—Spot market re-mains low; in fact, the prices in effect are less than import cost, and are, by the way, lowest on record.

Cassias.—All grades are in fair demand. Prices firm but un-changed.

Gingers are in better demand; prices steady. Cables quote Cochin at higher prices.

Seeds.—Caraway seed is in fair demand; price steady. Poppy and mustard unchanged and sell-ing in a satisfactory way

Baltimore Canned Goods.

No. 1

Buying this week has been of the same character as we have re-ported right along for the past month, and the market seems to be holding its own very well. The comparatively firm feeling which is now being shown by many packers is probably not due so much to the business which is being done as it is to the belief which most holders have that the market is down to bottom and will do better later on. Whether their hopes in this direction will be realized time will tell, but there is no doubt but what the total quantity of tomatoes being held in Maryland, Delaware and Vir-ginia constitutes a comparatively small percentage of this season's packing.

The market here has been dull on corn.

There are some people who think apples will surprise us some of these fine days, as there is no large stock of them on hand any-where. This may come about in a very natural way, as it is well known that all other kinds of pie fruits, such as peaches and small fruits, are pretty nearly ex-hausted.

Conditions for packing oysters in Baltimore have been a little more favorable this fall than usual, and some good oysters are being offered by Baltimore pack-ers, which are strictly Baltimore-packed goods.

Thos. G. Cranwell & Co.
Baltimore, Md.

No. 2.

Holders of tomatoes, in this section at least, feel more cheerful over the outlook because of the developments in the market dur-ing the past ten days. The buy-ing of them in carload lots on orders for immedate shipment in the face of the chance of freezing on the road is pretty good proof that they are wanted for immediate use, not for speculative purpose, and surely not to fatten up the inventory in January. The orders for them came from the West as well as from the East, and it is not so much the quantity purchased that cuts as much figure in the outlook as the fact that the goods are wanted now. The buyer may take only one carload at a time where ordinarily he would take five carloads, the fact of buying them at all is what counts. The other reason for the better feeling in that article is, as we mentioned last week, the action of the banks in again accepting canned goods as collateral against loans to canners. As yet there has been no advance from the low point on tomatoes, but, barring unlooked-for developments in the money market, there is more than a probability of some improvement before long.

Outside of tomatoes business here in the general line of goods was of the same character as in the preceding week, namely, the orders were confined almost altogether to small lots of assorted goods to piece out broken stocks, though they embraced nearly every article in the list. Cove oysters, sweet potatoes, string beans, peas, kraut and spinach were the articles wanted most.

Sugar.

The raw market has continued strong and prices are higher. A big business has been transacted in new crop Cubas at 3.86 cents. It is estimated that over 250,000 bags have been sold.

Strong European markets, the lateness in starting the Cuba crop, and a slightly improved demand for refined, have all contributed to the better raw situation. Europe has arrived at a point in the reaping of her beet crop where she can form definite conclusions, fairly definite, as to the probable outturn, and they expect a decreased yield. They have also had some trouble in getting supplies to market because of closed navigation on the rivers and canals of the continent. They have advanced quotations. Cuba at this time last year had 91 factories grinding and the reaping of the cane was well under way. This year the crop is delayed about three weeks, meaning that three weeks' working time has been taken out of the period available for grinding. It is also expected that because of the drouths during this past season the canes to be reaped from the present crop will contain less juice. Labor for plantation work is about as scarce as ever. A cable received to-day states that seven factories have started, opening the island's 1908 sugar season. The world next year will outturn a lower sugar production in both beet and cane. Consumption next year in all likelihood will be greater than it has this. The statistical position of sugar is good and prices next year will average higher. The situation is good to-day. What interests refined sugar buyers is how long it will remain good. Contracts are in, there is 5 points profit in them, and the demand won't be hurt any because of uncertainty due to fluctuations. We have not advised our friends to place contracts for more than enough sugar to carry them through 30 days. The first few months of a new year is a hard period for sugar; prices are never able to withstand the excessive supplies of raws that are shipped to our refinery ports. The crops of Cuba, Porto Rico and San Domingo are then in full operation. They don't hold their stock. This year, with conditions as they are, it looks as though a good market would hold over for a longer time than is usually the case, but supplies of raws in abundance will be getting here after the 15th of January and dealers in refined should keep this fact before them. In the meantime the contracts placed and the sugar held in store should yield a profit.

Refined Sugar.—Prices are held firm and the market is strong. The American Sugar Refining Co., Howell, and Arbuckle, quote f. o. b. net basis of 4.70 cents, less 1 per cent. cash, privilege of customary delayed shipment. The Federal is selling on a basis of 4.60 cents, less 1 per cent. cash, but they would accept orders for prompt shipment only. All refiners guarantee their own prices on day of arrival.

Domestic Beet Sugar.—Granulated is quoted at 4.60 cents, less 1 per cent. cash, but could possibly be bought at 10 points less.

Northwest Jobbers and Retailers Lie Down Like Lambs Together.

Washington State Jobber Says the Relation Between Them is So Close That "Partnership" Would Best Express It.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Spokane, Wash., Dec. 16, 1907.

At the recent banquet of the Spokane Jobbers' Association a significant statement was made by E. L. Powell, of the Powell-Sanders Co., regarding the relations of the jobbers with the retailers. It evidences an ideal condition which does not exist in most other sections of the country. The statement was as follows:—

> Their relations are closer than in any other city in the United States. Mr. Powell gave the dictionary definition of the words "wholesaler" and "retailer," which, he said, did not fully express the difference. He said the word "partnership" would more closely express their relations in Spokane. He added:
> The wholesaler here realizes that he must help the retailer to help himself. In furtherance of that policy the jobbers here sell only to dealers and not to consumers. We foster the retailers and have saved them money. How many eastern wholesalers do that with the western dealers who buy from them? In return for this policy the local dealers ought to be loyal to the home jobbers.

Retail grocers in Spokane are opposed to the public demand for a reduction in the prices of their goods just now, for the reason that the greater portion of them was bought or ordered before the slump. They are willing to reduce all local foodstuffs and necessaries, providing they receive the co-operation of the wholesaler, the manufacturer and their business associates. The dealers also say they will not introduce the copper coin until it is adopted by other tradesmen. At present 5 cents is the smallest coin.

I say unhesitatingly that in my udgment this is good advertis- ng. I speak more particularly of he matter; it is a question whether the type is not too small. The small lines underneath the oldface are set in about the mallest body type ever used. It ooks a little minute. Worthing- on & Co. may have a special rea- son for using a card of this size, such as that it fits in an envelope or something like that, but it is a question in my mind whether it isn't too small, or at least, if it doesn't contain too much matter. I happen to know that the firm have been using this same style of advertising for years, and I should suppose they were pretty well posted on whether it pays or not. If I were to use my own judgment I should increase the size of this card sufficiently to allow one or two sizes larger type all through. It will make it much easier to read and will not interfere in the least with the exclusive appearance that I imagine Worthington & Co. work to give their printed matter.

European Beet Sugar Prospects Poor.

In a report from Liege, Belgium, Consul H. Albert Johnson says it seems that the beet sugar situation this year is far from satisfactory, and that both the farmers and the sugar manufacturers have good grounds for uneasiness. The beet crop is decidedly short and the percentage of sugar, which it was hoped would be rather larger than usual, proves to be much below the average heretofore obtained. The period of sugar making will be short, and as prices are disastrously low, it is expected that more than one sugar factory will be obliged to suspend operations for next year.

How One Merchants' Association Solves the Christmas Present Question.

Germantown (Philadelphia) Business Men's Association Gives Its Customers a Christmas Entertainment.

The time is at hand when grocers and general storekeepers fuss and feaze over the question of giving Christmas presents to their customers—possibly the way the Business Men's Association of Germantown (Philadelphia) escape this worry may be interesting.

During the last week the Germantown Association has given to the customers of its members a complimentary Christmas entertainment. The same plan has been followed for several years. The association publishes a souvenir of the affair in which its objects are stated as follows:—

> The association of the business men of Germantown into an organization for the mutual protection of its members and the advancement by all fair and honorable means of such objects and the carrying out of such principles as will further the business interests of the town, and to encourage on the part of our townspeople a disposition to give precedence to its home industries and trade.

This entertainment was quite an elaborate affair. The largest public hall in Germantown was engaged; there was a humorist from New York, a cornet soloist, a harpist, an elocutionist, a contralto singer, and some moving pictures. Naturally the expense was heavy, but it was borne by the members co-operatively, so that each man's share was probably less than it would have cost him to give gifts to each customer. Each member of the association was given a certain number of tickets which he distributed among his customers. The hall was crowded and everybody went home happy.

How many of you have taken advantage of the offer made by S. B. Goff & Sons Co., of Camden, N. J.? All that have, appreciate by this time the benefits it contains. Those that have not do not realize exactly what they are missing. To the up-to-date storekeeper 70 per cent. is an attraction, and that is what the firm offers. Remember, Goff's remedies are standards, and are sold by 14,000 grocers.

What's the Real Christmas Spirit?

I had a talk with a certain grocer the other day about Christmas that interested me a good deal.

It may interest you.

I was in his store on business and was just about to leave.

"Well, old man," I said, "I won't see you again before Christmas. I hope you have a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year."

"Much obliged for the wish," he said, "but I ain't going to have it."

"How do you know you're not?" I asked him. "Why shouldn't you have?"

"I'm poor this year," he replied, "I've had a bad year. I've made some losses and business has been particularly slow for two months. A couple of mills have closed down here."

"I don't see what that's got to do with your having a good Christmas," I said.

"You don't!" he answered; "it looks to me as if it had all to do with it."

"What would have to be your condition so you could have what you'd call a good Christmas?" I asked him. I had put down my grip by this time; I'd rather get into an argument than spend money.

"Well, I'll tell you," he said. "I had a good Christmas last year. I'd had a fine year. Business was all right the whole year. The mills had been running full, everybody had plenty of money, and I'd made money. Besides that I'd cleaned up a little on the side in some deals I put through, and I was on Easy Street. I had a nice little pile of loose money in the bank. I didn't owe anything, and—well, I was feeling comfortable. This year I'm squeezed. I owe some bills, collections are rotten, and I haven't got any spare cash. Nobody could enjoy Christmas the way I'm fixed this year."

"Old man," I said, "you and I have known each other for a good many years, and I know you ain't going to take offense when I tell you that your idea of the Christmas spirit is plumb rotten."

He didn't take offense; as a matter of fact, he didn't understand.

"Your idea is that there's nothing in Christmas unless you're well heeled at Christmas time," I said. "You're wrong. I believe the real Christmas spirit is generosity toward other people. Even a bum can be generous."

"All right," he said. "Can't a man be more generous if he has more money to be generous with?"

"No," I replied, "generosity ain't a matter of amount at all."

And then I told him of a dear old friend of mine who up to last year had a big general store down in Maryland. He was a splendid fellow, but as poor a business man as ever lived. His troubles culminated in December, 1906, and on Christmas Day he knew that the next week he was going to be pushed into bankruptcy.

Now you'd think that if anything could spoil Christmas, that would, wouldn't you?

And yet that fellow told me afterward that he'd had one of the best Christmases he ever had in his life. He had no family, he only gave two presents, and those two took darned near all the ready cash he had at the time.

One of 'em was a chicken he gave to an old midwife who had gotten down on her luck and had no prospects for any Christmas, and the other was a dollar's worth of coal to a poor old nigger mammy who had been burned out of her little cabin the month before and was having hard work to get herself together.

That sort of thing always gets a lump in my throat. Think of it—that poor old bankrupt, everything he owned to be taken from him the next week, spending his last cent to give other people a taste of Christmas!

But that's the way to get the meat out of it all right.

As I say, I told my friend about this case, but it didn't sink in.

"I like to give things to people, too," he said, "and that's why I want money—so I can."

"But don't you see," I said, "that Christmas ain't a matter of so much money?"

Why, I'd rather get a Christmas card from somebody who sent along with it a warm wish for my good luck, than a check for a thousand dollars from somebody who threw it at me imply because he thought he had o.

Say, that reads like a fearful lie, lon't it? My friend the grocer et out a scornful yawp when I aid it. But I mean it—I'd rather ave the card. Of course I might et a man force the check on me, ut it would only be so he vouldn't be mortified by my anding it back.

I warn all you fellows not to end me any thousand-dollar hecks unless you really want me o have 'em; I may refuse 'em and urt your feelings.

Why at Christmas time I fairly ong sometimes for somebody to nake me a little present that omes because they want me to ave it and not because they think I'm going to give them something nd they'll have to hold up their nd.

I often wonder whether I couldn't do that by stopping giving any presents at all—simply receive. In that way I'd give people the pleasure of giving me things out of pure good feeling instead of in return for something they think I'm going to give them.

I believe I'll try that on my wife this year. I'll tell her in advance that if she gives me anything it'll have to be because she wants to, because there's not going to be anything doing from me.

And then on Christmas morning I'll wait in rosy anticipation for her to come to me with a sweet smile and a handsome present borne not of a selfish idea of give-and-get, but of pure unselfish generosity.

Drop in and see me that day any time you can. I'll be there, still waitin'.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

XXIII.—Keeping Goods Up to Sample.

Samples are often better than the stock which they are supposed to be exactly like.

Buyers know samples are always carefully selected, and in filling orders the goods are not selected, so when the goods arrive in the house they should be gone over in a thorough manner to see that they come up to the sample in every respect.

Some houses are so crooked the owners would never enjoy another night's good sleep if they sent out a bill of goods that exactly compared with the sample, while other houses have careless employees who do not carry out the strict orders of employers, so it is never safe to fail to inspect all goods as soon as they arrive.

That is the logical moment. Look them over carefully, note the shortcomings and write your letter of complaint without delay, while the entire transaction is fresh in the minds of all parties. If you bought from a house which wants to treat you right it will thank you for calling attention to such things, as it can then change its place of buying, weed out undesirable employees, or rectify the trouble, whatever it may be, so it will not continue to occur. If you bought from a house which does not want to treat you right, then you have all the more reason for standing up for all of your rights and seeing that you get them.

A thorough inspection of goods on arrival is the first step to insure exact justice for your own business, and it is your own business which you must protect.

New Orleans, La.

As a result of the stand taken some weeks ago by the New Orleans Retail Grocers' Association to have the Quaker Oats Co. to eliminate the retail price from its advertisements, the company is now pasting stickers on the packages, thus giving the retail grocers full swing to make a reasonable profit on all Quaker Oats goods. The association sent a letter to the company requesting that the price of 10 cents be eliminated from all advertising matter, especially with reference to the "Saturday Evening Post" and "Collier's Weekly."

South Bethlehem, Pa.

The Commercial League of South Bethlehem, Pa., has sent out notices warning its members to look out for the vinegar law.

Pennsylvania State Grange.

The Pennsylvania State Grange, composed largely of farmers, pledged itself at its annual meeting in West Chester last week, to work for a modification of the present national oleomargarine laws. Through the following resolutions the present laws were denounced and a reform demanded:—

Whereas, Investigations made by officials of the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Division, together with members of the Pennsylvania Pure Butter Protective Association and Patrons, have clearly shown that serious defects exist in the Federal laws which deal with oleomargarine, butterine, renovated and adulterated butter; and

Whereas, At the annual meeting of the Pennsylvania Pure Butter Protective Association, held in Philadelphia, May 4, 1907, it was admitted by a representative of the Federal Department of Justice that defects in national oleomargarine laws were so numerous that it was "almost impossible and also most humiliating" for prosecuting officers of his department to attempt to secure convictions of oleomargarine law violators, and that the Federal laws would have to be changed to obtain requisite protection for the dairy interests; and

Whereas, The word "knowingly," which is generally used in connection with every offense in the statutes under the Federal laws, practically nullifies successful prosecution, should be removed.

The definition of oleomargarine under the Federal act of August 2, 1886, should be so changed that butter, with or without coloring matter, shall not be used in the manufactture of oleomargarine. The permission to use butter, colored or uncolored, in olcomargarine, is objectionable, because it makes a fraudulent product more difficult of detection.

The word "knowingly" has apparently with design been omitted in the Federal law which relates to sale of oleomargarine imported from foreign countries. Common fairness requires the same provision shall apply to a person who sells or offers for sale oleomargarine produced in the United States.

The United States revenue laws should be changed so as to require a record to be kept of the serial number or stamp on each package of oleomargarine, renovated and adulterated butter that is placed upon the market, as is the case with other articles subject to taxation, so that every package, wherever found may be successfully traced to the dealer or manufacturer.

The national law should be so changed that it will not be necessary to prove that the yellow color of oleomargarine is due to a foreign substance introduced for the purpose of giving color. If the Federal law was amended so as to make it practically conform to the Pennsylvania law on this subject, it would afford protection to pure butter which is not at present given by national law on this color question.

As the revenue law now stands, revenue collectors can, by and with consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, settle by compromise all civil and criminal cases arising from violations of the law. This opens the way for abuses on the part of violators who are able to bring men of prominence and influence to their rescue; consequently, any such feature or provision of the law should be eliminated.

The present internal revenue laws have been so interpreted by United States District Judges as to permit the concealing of stamps, marks and brands, after they are placed on packages of oleomargarine, renovated butter and adulterated butter. This statute requires to be so changed that stamps, marks and brands shall be exposed to the public.

Applications for revenue license should be required to certify that the location given is true and correct as to address, and if oleomargarine is sold by the applicant at any other location than that designated in the revenue license, it should be a misdemeanor; and

Whereas, It is very evident from samples of oleomargarine obtained in the open market and now in our possession, that officials connected with the internal revenue department, and who are charged under the Grout Bill with fixing the tax of 10 cents per pound on colored oleomargarine and the tax of one-quarter of a cent per pound on uncolored oleomargarine, are manifestly derelict in the enforcement of the law; and

Whereas, The seriously defective Federal laws and the apparent system of non-enforcement of the same by certain officials is a great menace to the important dairy interests of the nation; therefore be it

Resolved, That the worthy master be empowered to appoint a special committee of five patrons to co-operate with the Pennsylvania Pure Butter Protective Association and the Dairy and Food Commissioner of Pennsylvania, and at as early a date as practicable, interview the President of the United States with regard to this important subject.

Whereas, From evidence produced in the court of Delaware County, Pa., it has been proven that oleomargarine colored with coal tar dye has been sold as butter by women and children to numerous citizens, in direct violation of the Pennsylvania oleomargarine law; and

Whereas, It is evident that this is the part of an organized plan of the Oleomargarine Trust to create sympathy and thereby dispose of a spurious butter product in violation of Pennsylvania law; and

Whereas, It is the sworn duty of the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Commissioner and his agents to enforce existing laws, we most earnestly protest against any judge who fails or neglects to administer in keeping with his sworn duty the laws as he finds them on the statute books.

Whereas, We believe that the dairy interests of the State would be benefited by such change in the law which will give one official full charge of enforcing the laws which deal with dairy products; therefore be it

Resolved, That we would respectfully ask the Governor of the commonwealth to favor the enactment of a law which will provide for the office of Dairy Commissioner, who shall have power to enforce laws on adulterated butter, renovated butter, oleomargarine, butterine butter and other dairy products.

Resolved, That the laws which deal with other food products and beverages shall be placed in charge of the State Health Department.

Here Is a Good Scheme!

Grocers sometimes demonstrate these with fine results. The demonstration shows two things—first, the ease with which beef tea, bouillon or soup is made from these capsules, one of which has simply to be dropped in a cup of hot water; then it shows the delicious, spicy flavor.

You can sell hundreds of boxes, and every one at a profit.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

The barn shown to the left of sketch is made of candy boxes. The doors may be left open and a small sleigh containing Santa Claus and drawn by reindeers may be in the doorway as if ready to start out.

The uprights of the arch are made of candy boxes placed cross-wise of each other. The upper part of arch may be made of wood and covered with "turkey red" calico, and the letters forming the words "Merry Christmas" should be made of silver tinsel, and the curved part of the arch should also be outlined with silver tinsel. A large pyramid of oranges is placed slightly in back of arch so that point of pyramid comes about midway between two uprights, and suspended about ten inches above point have a large bunch of Malaga grapes hung by a black linen thread attached to either top of arch or ceiling of window. Next place open candy boxes (filled with candy) on a slightly inclined plane so that candy may easily be seen from sidewalk. Between uprights of the arch and extending possibly 18 or 20 inches toward front glass of window have very neat little cards in each box giving price of that box of candy in plain figures

On each side of arch have a small pyramid of oranges with a string of silver tinsel extending from point of pyramid to the curve on the arch and a single row of oranges from one pyramid around front of arch to the other pyramid.

The background may be made of evergreen boughs, as shown in sketch, with here and there a small colored electric bulb. However, the most of light should come from front of window from concealed electric bulbs.

Then have your job printer cut up about a peck measure full of cheap white paper into squares about a quarter of an inch large. He can easily do this for you on his cutting machine. Toss this paper on to your mosquito netting and start your electric fans, and you will have a very real snowstorm scene, which will not fail to attract attention if you are clever in hiding the fans so that they cannot be seen from the front of window.

"The Limit of Rare Quality"

You may or may not have seen our trade mark, the "Pure Food Boy."

If you haven't, we've both missed something: We, because we haven't had your trade; you, because you have so far missed knowing the purest, sweetest brand of corn, peas, string beans, etc., packed—the Olney brand.

Guaranteed as pure as the growing things themselves. But the flavor is the strong point. "Our Products Retain the Harvest's Ripe Flavor." This point has always distinguished Olney canned products from others. It's partly produced by our knowledge of how to grow fruits and vegetables which reach the limit of rare quality, and partly by advanced canning processes that are matched nowhere else in this country.

What The Seven Washings Are For

WE believe we are not unjust to our competitors when we say that probably no one of them goes to the length we do in the manufacture of starch.

Why the raw materials in Murdoch's Laundry and Corn Starch go through seven washings before we are satisfied. Why? To eliminate every atom of gluten, so that the starch will have the snowy whiteness that users of our brands have come to associate with them.

Every other manufacturing detail is taken care of in the same way. We must, we will and we do make the cleanest, purest, snowiest starches on the market. Both the laundry and corn starch are now packed with universal coupons.

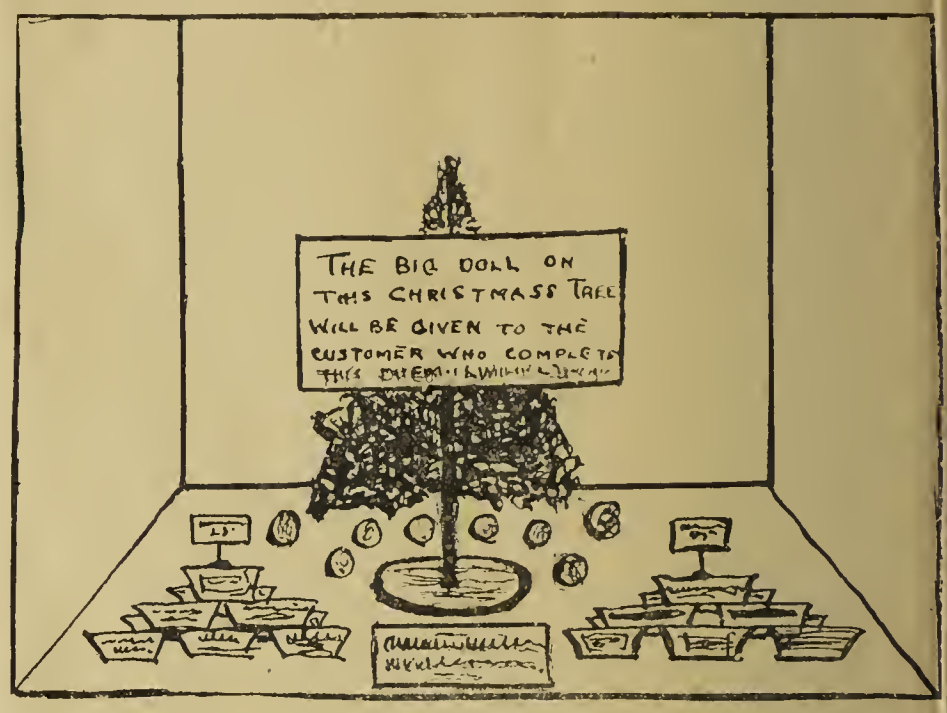
Here is a design of a window display suitable for this season of the year. It is inexpensive and when followed out with more detail it makes a very attractive display. Procure a small Christmas tree and decorate with various novelties and sweets. Also hang up a doll on the tree so as it will attract attention. On a card at the base of the tree write a verse of poetry (the latest ad. craze) and on a card placed in the window in front of the tree state that the doll will be given to the person giving the best and most appropriate final line to the verse,



Around the tree display plum pudding, fruits, nuts and various other fancy eatables that are suitable for Christmas. The same idea of a display can be made for any season of the year by substituting some other decorations than the Christmas one.

The real value of the display comes in on the verse, as it is new and is always sure of starting a lively competition for the prize, whether the prize be article of ornament or some grocery article.

Then again, a verse can easily be composed referring to the goods displayed in the window.

s to the "Outlook" and the Standard Oil Company.

Boston, Dec. 13, 1907.

ditor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I noticed an edi- rial in your paper several weeks go criticising the "Outlook" agazine seriously for publishing article praising the business ficiency of the Standard Oil Co. our paper even intimated a be- ef that the article was paid for as advertisement.

As a constant reader of the Outlook" I do not think that the Grocery World" is quite fair in ich criticism. There is a good de to even so black a corpor- ion as the Standard Oil Co. No ne can deny their business ficiency, and the "Outlook" has own no special tenderness to- ards any of the offending cor- orations. In my opinion the usiness ability of all corporations a thing apart from said corpora- on's morals, or rather the mor- ls of its directors. The "Out- ook" gave a reason for the article which you object on its edi- rial page in the same or a pre- ious issue.

A Variety of Matter.

Troy, N. Y., Dec. 13, 1907.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Your question de- partment has been of such use and interest to us, in common with many others, that we are encour- aged to make still another in- quiry.

We would like to have another word in regard to our queries of two weeks since, if you are not tired of the subject.

Your advice in regard to the in- surance association is no doubt good, but the People's Mutual, of Syracuse, has not, as you seem to think, a low rate. The death benefit on a payment of $1 per month is only $100, or only one- fourth of what the old line com- panies pay. Then the Mutual does not actually pay, or claim to pay, a dividend of $250 on a total of $250 payments in five years, but on your payment of $250 and some one else's payment of $250 or more that he has allowed to lapse. What we contend is that the scheme or plan of this com- pany is entirely feasible, and is much more just to the policy holders than that of the old line companies, who have made in lapses 66 per cent. of total insur- ance written and returned nothing of it to their policy holders.

The Klondike never revealed such a gold mine as the old line companies have been to financiers who started with nothing. After building $12,000,000 and $15,000,- 000 office buildings, paying their officers salaries of from $25,000 to $100,000 per year, they have had such a surplus that they actually did not know what to do with it, loaning it to their own and other financiers, often with- out proper security, to speculate with and swell their already over- grown fortunes. Why should not a portion of the enormous profits of the insurance business be re- turned to the policy holders, where it belongs?

The other proposition we sub- mitted to you was that of an order route, conducted, together with the other business of the store, for two years; sales, $150 per week, or $15,000 in all; profit, 16 per cent., or $2,400 in the two years (we could not run business on the 10 or 12 per cent. you esti- mate; what do we take the "Gro- cery World" for? (We certainly think the intelligence of the mar- kets and the business hints that it gives adds 5 per cent. to our profits.) Debts on route, weekly and monthly accounts, $250, not over $25 of which is uncollectible; expenses only wear and tear, sales largely tea and coffee; estimate expenses this way because we have to have two teams anyway, and clerk who does the order route also does all the bookkeep- ing for the store, also the buying. Now, is the above amount of out- standing accounts exorbitant for this route, and if so, how can it be reduced? If Mrs. A buys of us for a year, say, $15 per month, and at the end of that time owes us about $10, which is never much more or less after the month's payment, is it not clear that it takes an average of about $18 capital to run the account? And how are you going to help it if you cannot collect it without can- celling the account when, as Mrs. A is reckoned perfectly good by the trade, your nearest rival will step right in and give her all the credit she wants?

With best wishes, we are,
Yours truly,
B. & R.

As to the insurance scheme, this correspondent's argument does not convince the writer that it is a safe plan to adopt. The writer has never known a scheme to succeed whose prospect of profit was based mainly on the expectation of lapses. It has al- ways seemed to be a particularly loose and unbusiness-like founda- tion on which to build the expec- tation of making a profit—the hope that members would violate their contracts and default in their payments.

As to the amount of outstand- ing bills receivable, in the order route described, the writer still thinks there is a little too much on the books. How to remedy it, however, we do not know, unless by being more strict in collections. Many a dealer fails to be strict through fear of losing customers, but nevertheless there seem to be quite a number of dealers who

We've Made "EXTON" Oyster Crackers for 60 Years

In itself, and by itself, that fact is significant.

Nothing but a superior article could last so long, and none but a very superior cracker could retain its leadership as the "EXTON" Oyster Cracker has done.

It MADE the standard of quality by which all other oyster crackers can safely be judged, and by which they HAVE been judged.

It's the Cracker King now as it has always been, and makes its sixty-first annual bow to the trade with a vigor that's growing steadily.

It's ready for the fall business whenever you are, and guarantees the same ideal quality which has made the name "EXTON" famous wherever oysters are known.

A Big New York Concern to Share Their Profits With Retailers.

The Knickerbocker Chocolate Co., of New York, who have for years very extensively advertised their Barker's Hasty Lunch Chocolate and Bedford and Blue Ribbon Cocoas, have recently made an arrangement to share their profits with retail grocers. They have identified themselves with the Manufacturers' Trade-mark Association of New York, and are packing Universal Coupons for dealers with their goods to give them an extra inducement for pushing them.

This proposition should interest grocers everywhere because of the character of this firm and the well-known popularity of its produets. Universal Coupons are the most valuable premium vouchers ever issued because they are exchangeable for such high-class merchandise and because they come to grocers from so many sources, they can accumulate enough of them in a shor time to entitle them to such articles a roll-top desks, platform scales, deliver wagons and even pianos and automo biles.

In pushing Barker's Hasty Lunch Chocolate, Bedford Cocoa and Blue Rib bon Cocoa grocers are certain of two things which are important—pleasin their trade and getting an extra profi which they can't get with any othe chocolate or cocoa on the market.

The cranberry market seems t be badly slumped. Cape Co berries of fair quality are coming in for as low as $4 to $5, and fanc berries have been sold at $6 dur ing the week. New Jerse berries are going begging at $1.7 per crate and it is hard to get ove $2.00 for the best fruit coming.

Heart-to-Heart Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Groce Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Ad vice From the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—ED]

LANDING GOOD ORDERS.

Now's the time to sell big orders and push out the best goods. The country customers will begin to buy during the coming week. Keep the low price goods out of sight and out of mind. The 40-50 prunes in 25-pound boxes at $3; the 5-pound boxes Delatour chocolates at $1.75; the quarter boxes table raisins at $1.35; 3-pound tins plum pudding at 65 cents. Things like these keep before you for our liberal buyers.

THE SUGGESTION TABLE.

It takes an experienced salesman a very short time to size up a buyer. The men often take the Christmas order in hand. He likes to do it big. He enjoys being told that "Papa knows a good thing when he sees it." Let "Papa" see things. Give him his fill of the suggestion table. He only buys groceries once a year, and then he wants the finest—nothing short of the finest. He has the price for stuffed prunes, salted almonds, glace fruits, brandied peaches, dollar tea, imported biscuit, and so on. But he needs attention. He needs encouragement. Give him both liberally, gladly. Take good care of his order.

OPEN EVENINGS.

Beginning Monday store wil be open every evening; not tha we will sell much, but that w will keep the work and the order and the store's appearance in ship shape. Make things shine. Kee the Christmas sellers at you ready hand. Be ready to do busi ness when the doors are opene every morning. Sell profitable goods. Let your customer leave you well impressed with the store's real business integrity Get into the Christmas spirit.

GET INTO THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT.

The joyous spirit of doing business under pleasant surroundings. Indifference is a terrible calamity to get into the brain of any young man. Don't harbor it for a moment. If you do it will work ruin. Be earnest, concentrate your mind on what should be a pleasant task. Selling good goods is a pleasant task. Handling cranky people is a pleasant task. Adapting yourself to different temperaments in the course of a day's business is an extremely interesting and instructive task.

What's in a Name?

We'll tell you. We have picked out the name Apelpi for our Evaporated Apples, so that every time it is thought of particular people will think of the finest fruit of this kind ever put on the market.

We have adopted the sentence, "The bottom as good as the top," because that is unusual with evaporated apples, and we pride ourselves on the fact that it applies to ours. Put them in, and your troubles in this direction are over.

How to Make Other Cocoas as Good as Ours

Take the average cocoa on the market and carry it through another process or two, and you may have an article about as good as Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa.

The trouble is that other manufacturers will not use that "other process or two," because of its cost. They prefer to send out their product half made, as it were—containing indigestible and ill-tasting ingredients which should have been eliminated—so that they can save a little on the cost of making.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa has everything taken out that should be taken out, and for that reason, among others, it has the smoothest, finest flavor of any cocoa made.

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

A Balloon Race

ıas recently been held, in which all records for distance have been eclipsed. Be careful and ;ystematic handling they were kept near enough to the ground to accomplish the purpose)f the test. They were under perfect control at all times, except for direction.

Think of the perfection of the bag which retained the gas sufficient to carry the weight!

A SMALL LEAK would have made these results impossible; the gas would escape ınd the balloon come down.

THE SUCCESS of your business depends upon the degree of protection secured in ıandling your goods. A small loss on each weighing will surely and steadily decrease your profits. You must avoid it.

MONEYWEIGHT SCALES are proven to be the only scales which will handle your goods without loss. The immense number of successful merchants using them is proof of our claims.

A short demonstration of our scale will convince you that they will save you money. Will you let us prove it? If so, send in the attached coupon.

Karo
CORN SYRUP

Why?

Anybody who knows will tell you that Corn Syrup has almost completely supplanted sugar syrup in some sections of the country.

Why? Because it is smoother, mellower and lacks the sharp twang that makes sugar syrup disliked by many.

Karo Syrup is the acknowledged best of the Corn Syrups. Its superfine quality never varies, and all jobbers handle it—two important things to remember.

Sealed at the factory in 10, 25 and 50-cent sizes.

CORN PRODUCTS MANUFACTURING COMPANY
Davenport, Iowa

It Is Spelled R-A-M-L-Y

If you want to sell a really delightful smoke, get the real Ramly, don't take something gotten up to look like the Ramly, because there the similarity ends.

No cigarette ever made has jumped into such immediate popularity. It has become famous on its quality alone.

If you put Ramly Cigarettes in stock you will be assured of the permanent patronage of every man to whom you sell a package.

Don't get confused on the name—it is spelled R-A-M-L-Y.

"I Wish I Had Some Real Gelatine"

Every day some woman in your town bemoans the disappearance of old-style gelatine--the clean, delicious, melting kind, flavored with lemon, that we learned to like on our mother's table.

Old-style gelatine has not disappeared, though at times it has seemed to be snowed under by the flavorless imitations that hide their worthlessness behind bright colors.

Chalmers' Gelatine is old-fashioned gelatine—nothing in it but purest calves' stock and spring water. Your customers want it.

Your Profit on ARIOSA

The idea some grocers have that they can't make a good profit on Ariosa Coffee is incorrect.

Ariosa Coffee is the largest package Coffee seller in the world. As with all widely-sold things it is sold closer than things that sell in one quarter the quantity.

Which is better—to sell twenty-five pounds of your own package Coffee a week and make 10 cents a pound profit, or sell 100 pounds of Ariosa and make 5 cents a pound profit?

Not to speak of the Ariosa vouchers that are practically like finding several hundred dollars a year.

Don't forget that we have already created the demand for Ariosa Coffee; there is nothing left for you to do but satisfy it.

"As Good As I Bought Last Time"

You ought to sell Swift's PREMIUM Hams for your own protection. Can you satisfy your trade unless your hams are uniform? And can they be uniform unless bought from a packer who can keep his raw material uniform?

Few packers have our facilities for keeping hams up to a given standard year after year. Swift's PREMIUM Hams scarcely vary a hair's breadth from one year's end to another. That does us a whole lot of good, as it will do you.

The woman who can always depend on getting good ham—"as good as I bought last time"—is going to buy lots of ham.

"The Pickles and Table Condiments prepared by The Williams Bros. Co., Detroit, Mich., are the very best. For sale by the wholesale trade all over the United States."

A Wonderful New Process

No pickles packed in glass can approach Hoffman House little pickles, packed in tin.

They are unquestionably the most delicious little pickles packed, not because they are packed in tin altogether, but because they are prepared by a new process, owned and used by us alone.

Tenders them without destroying crispness, gives them an extra spicy vim, and entirely eliminates that harsh vinegary bite that keeps the eater of some pickles from eating all he wants.

The tins are enameled inside—as safe and sanitary as porcelain.

WALKER STORE FIXTURES

—Attract Good Trade—

There is so much to be said to the merchant about to buy new fixtures that we prefer to send our catalogue, which will set him wise on many points that he should know. Our designs and our workmanship are unsurpassed. Our customers write that they are more than pleased with the appearance of their stores.

WE KNOW HOW TO DESIGN ARTISTIC INTERIORS

We are ready at all times to offer suggestions covering any detail. And our catalogue is sufficiently explicit to make it both interesting and instructive. Send for it.

"As Good as the 'J. M.'"

No delivery wagon built is as good as the "J. M.," though many are said to be. The makers of other wagons do the best they can, but they haven't our facilities.

The "J. M." wagon is the handsomest, longest-lived delivery wagon on the market. No other wagon manufacturer we ever knew rejected everything but second-growth hickory for wheels, as we do.

You May Think You Can't Afford an Automobile in Your Business, but, as a Matter of Fact, You Can't Afford NOT To Have One

A Rapid Motor Truck or Delivery Wagon will do more work than two teams at half the cost. If you can deliver twice as many goods at half your present expense with one of our machines, are you not making a mistake to stick to horses and wagons. Do you know that the trolleys don't cost as much to run as the horse cars? We are certain you know they do much better work.

Get our catalogue and we will show you the Twentieth Century method of delivering goods.

"Grocery World" Sends Challenge to "Woman's Home Companion"

Weird Statements in the January Article Arouse Strong Suspicion of Article's Truth. Groceries Bought at Dirty and Clean Stores in "Philadelphia Suburb." Prunes Sold as "Seconds." Strange Mixture Sold as Mocha and Java Coffee. A Challenge to Disclose the Name of the Suburb and the Names of the Stores.

The "Woman's Home Companion," in its articles attacking grocers as a class, is growing somewhat incoherent. The title of the January article is "Can we afford to be clean?" This article discusses a variety of matter, based on the difference between a number of articles alleged to have been purchased first of a dirty grocery and then of a clean one, both said to be in "a summer resort within easy access of Philadelphia." The extent to which the article is really true may be judged from the statement made that the prunes bought at the clean store were sold as "seconds." Another statement that the "Mocha and Java" coffee bought at the dirty store proved to be a blend of Mocha, Java, Rio and chicory also gives an idea of the truth of the article. From the time the sale of coffee began there has probably never been such a combination as Java, Mocha, Rio and chicory. Further, under the food laws it can be stated as a fact that there is literally no mixture of coffee and chicory on the market to-day, unless it is so labeled.

The "Grocery World" does not know, of course, but it believes the "Woman's Home Companion" article to be mostly fake, conjured up out of a lively imagination to make a point. In order to bring out the truth the "Grocery World" has sent a marked copy of this article to the "Woman's Home Companion" and has challenged its editor to name the Philadelphia suburb referred to and also to give the names of the two stores located in such suburb at which he claims to have purchased goods of such widely varying quality. The gist of the January article follows:—

> She is one of those delightful, old-fashioned housekeepers, aged twenty-eight, who still regards the Saturday-night bath as a family institution and who fights incipient pneumonia with onion poultices. Her income is small. Her energy and resourcefulness are boundless.
> We stood before a model grocery in a summer resort within easy access of Philadelphia. This grocery was not the largest store in the little suburb—it was, however, a clean store. One window, sparkling like rain-washed crystal, was filled with glass jars containing preserved peaches, canned fruit in irridescent juices, maraschino cherries, mint jellies, etc. In the other were forts and barricades built of imported and domestic canned goods of standard brands, from the humble sardine to pate de foie-gras.
> 'The height of my ambition is to trade in that store. Only the summer colony folk can pay their prices, but if ever John and I get rich—"
> The pause and sigh of happy anticipation were eloquent of the joys which that model grocery would then unfold. Whereupon we turned our backs on temptation, cut through an alley to the street where native marketers congregate, and entered a grocery which was not a model one. The windows needed washing; so did the counters. Barrels were uncovered, dust filtered into everything, boxes of crackers and breakfast food, piled in hopeless confusion, were fly specked, and in many instances cartons were broken by careless handling, so that dust could enter unchecked.
> A side of bacon lay on the ground near the meat block, and clerk after clerk kicked it aside because his hands were too full to pick it up. Flies swarmed on half a ham which lay on the meat block. The floor was as dirty as a combination of sawdust which had not been renewed for days, bacon rind, mackerel brine and tobacco juice could make it. I remembered my hostess' immaculate kitchen, and wondered.
> Then her earnest tones broke into my thoughts:
>
> "You're sure it is good tea? I would like to have that nice milk pitcher—Bobbie broke mine only yesterday—but I want good tea, too."
> "The best package goods in the market, English Breakfast, and Oolong, perfectly blended, special for to-day, only seventy-five cents—and the pitcher."
> "Well, I never paid seventy-five cents a pound for tea—but that pitcher certainly is lovely."
> So the bargain was closed. The pitcher had won.
> That night at supper the man of the house made a wry face and asked whether the tea had been boiled. The old-fashioned housekeeper looked at the new milk pitcher, and two lines came into her nice, white forehead. Later, when we were doing the dishes together, she "'fessed up."
> "That is the first time I ever bought premium goods. John always says you can't get china and quality for one and the same price, but that horrid grocer would not sell me the pitcher. Well, I suppose I'll have to give the whole package to Mary Miller."
> Admirable arrangement for Mary Miller, the washerwoman, but at least fifty cents must be charged to waste, for the pitcher could be bought at any china shop for a quarter or less.
> It seemed the psychological moment for my experiment, so I said:
> "Did you keep your sale slip with the prices of those groceries we bought to-day?"
> With a moist hand she tossed me the slip of pink paper.
> "To-morrow, just for fun, we will take this list and go to the store where the summer colonists trade."
> The old-fashioned housekeeper gave her tea towel a parting twist, flung it over a rack, and announced:
> "Now, my dear woman, I don't intend to let you do anything reckless."
> "For the good of the cause," I begged; and then she murmured something about folks with theories, and laughed like a child who had been promised a visit to the circus.
> And on the morrow we went to the model store.
> Here are the lists:—
> SALE SLIP FROM UNTIDY STORE.
> | | |
> |---|---|
> | 1 lb. premium mixed tea | 75 cts. |
> | 1 lb. Our Own coffee (M. & J.) | 34 cts. |
> | ½ lb. American cheese | 9 cts. |
> | 1 package macaroni | 12 cts. |
> | 1 salmon | 12 cts. |
> | 1 lb. prunes (California) | 12 cts. |
> | 3½ lbs. gr. sugar | 19 cts. |
> | 1 jar sweet pickles | 25 cts. |
> | 1 bt. vanilla | 9 cts. |
> | ½ doz. lemons | 13 cts. |
> SALE SLIP FROM MODEL STORE.
> | | |
> |---|---|
> | 1 lb. mixed tea, No. 3 quality | 63 cts. |
> | 1 lb. Mocha and Java coffee (ground) | 30 cts. |
> | ½ lb. American cheese | 9 cts. |
> | 1 package macaroni | 12 cts. |
> | 1 salmon | 12 cts. |
> | 1 lb. prunes | 12 cts. |
> | 3½ lbs. gr. sugar | 17 cts. |
> | 1 jar sweet pickles | 25 cts. |
> | 1 bt. vanilla | 10 cts. |
> | ½ doz lemons | 15 cts. |
> For her original purchases at the untidy store, my hostess paid $2.20. The duplicate order at the model store footed up fifteen cents less, or $2.05. Allowing that the milk pitcher was worth twenty-five cents on the face of the sale slip, she paid ten cents more for the goods purchased at the model store than for those bought at the less desirable grocery.
> But the prices attached to the articles do not always represent their true household value.
> To begin with, the "premium mixed tea," on examination by an expert, proved to be not a mixture of Oolong and English Breakfast (a most remarkable combination, by the way), as claimed by the oily grocery clerk, but a low grade of Oolong and green, with a considerable proportion of what is known as "siftings," the whole worth not a penny over thirty-seven cents a pound. The sixty-three-cent mixed tea bought at the model store was well worth in brewing strength and fineness of flavor at least double the inferior brand, and was a real bargain at its price.
> But that is not the whole story. Every woman knows that when you use an inferior brand of tea you lose both flavor and strength, and the average housewife uses once and a half the quantity of cheap tea she would need of a better grade. However, if we leave this latter point out of the reckoning, the difference between the price charged for the premium tea, seventy-five cents, and its worth, thirty-seven cents, was represented by a china pitcher which could be duplicated for twenty-five cents. Actual loss here thirteen cents, to say nothing of the difference in flavor.
> The second purchase, "Our Own Blend" coffee, put up in an attractive tin can, proved to be not pure Mocha and Java, as was claimed, but a blend of Mocha, Java, Rio coffee and chicory, which could have been sold at a profit for twenty-five cents. The Mocha and Java coffee purchased at the model store came out of the test with flying colors, two-thirds Java and one-third Mocha, with no adulteration, yet it was sold at four cents a pound cheaper.
> Now, I hold no brief for Mocha and Java coffee. There are many households where Maracaibo or Rio coffee at eighteen or twenty cents a pound is preferred to Mocha and Java at thirty, but this is not the question at issue. This particular housewife thought she was buying pure Mocha and Java coffee at thirty-four cents a pound, and instead she was receiving an adulterated article.
> Perhaps the grocer knew this, or perhaps he had bought the coffee in all honest ignorance. But after long months of investigation, during which I have bought goods in all sorts of stores in many different parts of the country, the conclusion is forced upon me that not only is the average dirty grocer willing to force upon his customer an inferior article in return for a big profit, but he is forced to do so in order to make a living. This is a day of system in the grocery business, as elsewhere. System means order, and order in a grocery store requires cleanliness. The unclean grocer is not a systematic grocer, and the unsystematic grocer loses money in his buying, in the conduct of his store, and in the treatment of his customers. The trade which he loses through untidiness and incapacity, to say nothing of the waste of stock through careless handling of his goods, makes it necessary for him to sell at a higher profit than the man whose store is run methodically, systematically and cleanly.
> To return to our price-lists, the cost of American cream cheese at both stores was the same, as was the quality, but there was one important difference. The cheese from the model store was delivered in a wrapping of oiled paper. It had been cut with a clean knife. The cheese from the dirty store had been sliced with a rusty or dirty knife, which left a grayish-brown streak on one side of the piece, and there was an ugly thumb mark near the rind. This dirt my hostess sliced off with infinite care. We weighed these parings, and they tipped the scales at nearly an ounce. Provided my hostess received sixteen ounces to the pound, or eight ounces for nine cents, she lost nearly an eighth of the cheese bought at the dirty store, or more than a cent's worth.
> The purchase of macaroni in the package could not be expected to produce startling comparisons between the two stores, because goods put up in packages even from a dirty store are protected against the rusty knife and the smutty thumb. The two batches of macaroni were there-

Oleo Men Assault Food Agent

So Reports Commissioner Foust in Monthly Bulletin. Candy Investigation Under Way. Catsups too Heavily Loaded with Benzoate of Soda about To Be Prosecuted. Some Extracts from the Chemist's Report.

The Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Commissioner again discusses interestingly upon food law matters in the monthly bulletin of his department, the latest copy of which is dated November 15th, and reached the "Grocery World" during the week. Here are some extracts from the editorial pages:—

A singular incident of short-sightedness occurred in Pittsburg some weeks ago. Agent Miller, of the Dairy and Food Division, visited a grocery and purchased samples of oleomargarine, acting in accordance with his instructions. Soon after he left the store the proprietor's two brothers overtook him. They assaulted him with great violence; threw him to the sidewalk and proceeded to rob him of the article he had just purchased from them. Agent Miller was somewhat bruised and cut up in the affray. He immediately brought suit against the two men who had assailed him, charging them with highway robbery, assault and battery and felonious assault. They were arrested and the State will push the case with all possible vigor.

At a recent meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association of Allegheny county, a resolution was adopted providing that "every merchant report to the secretary of this association any violation of the State food law, giving all the information he possibly can, and that the secretary of the association take the matter up with the State Dairy and Food Department." That is unquestionably the proper attitude for retail dealers throughout the State to take.

One hundred samples of candy—principally penny goods—have recently been purchased by agents of the Dairy and Food Division and are now in the hands of various chemists. In due time an official report of the results of the analysis will be made public. The goods were bought in Blair, Venango, Warren, McKean, Allegheny, Washington, Bucks, Berks and Philadelphia counties. If the children are eating poisoned or adulterated goods their parents should be put in possession of the facts. On the other hand if the confectionery is pure manufacturers and dealers are entitled to full credit, for their carefulness and their regard for law.

Some of the agents of the Dairy and Food Division are finding certain catsups which contain twice the amount of benzoate of soda that is announced on the label. This is a serious violation of law and a gross deception of the purchaser. The matter is being carefully looked into and in due time prosecutions will be instituted against offenders.

When a manufacturer offers retailers an article which he sells for ice cream it should be precisely what it purports to be. Such goods could not be sold for the prices now most popular. Cream costs money. A good article of genuine ice cream, containing nothing but first-class materials would cost double the price for which the inferior article can be sold. Imitations are usually much cheaper than the thing they imitate, and the person who is satisfied with the imitation should be allowed to have it. But the law should step in and prevent the sale of imitation goods for genuine. Every citizen has the right to enter the open market and buy what he wants, but the law should compel the dealer to tell the exact truth.

Are you exercising the care that you should in the purchase of your goods, in order that you may have the protection afforded you under the new Pennsylvania Food Law, approved June 1, 1907?

Do you examine each invoice? Do you see that the invoice is properly dated? Do you see that the goods purchased are all named in the invoice? Do you see that the invoice bears a guarantee?

The bulletin reports the following apparent violations of the food law:—

Sample bought of William Sheehan, 329 Fifth avenue, McKeesport. Sold for butter. Chemist's report—Colored oleomargarine.

Sample bought of McKees Rocks Dairy (Chas. Reeder), 310 Chartiers avenue, McKees Rocks. Sold for butter. Chemist's report—Colored oleomargarine.

Sample bought of C. Martin, 28 Front street, Darby. Sold for butter. Chemist's report—Colored oleomargarine.

Sample bought of Coxes' Restaurant (Alfred M. Cox), 328 Eighth avenue, Homestead. Sold for butter. Chemist's report—Oleomargarine.

The Christmas Retail Grocery Business. Discussion Still Rife over Calling Glucose Corn Syrup. The Foreign Label Controversy. New Plans for Laws in Grocers' Interest. Small Trade News.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, Dec. 27, 1907.

"My cash receipts the day before Christmas were larger than on the same day in any other year for ten years past." So said L. J. Callanan to-day when he was asked about the condition of trade. He added that his entire holiday business has been of the briskest kind and he can see no reason for complaint, from the point of view of a retail grocer. He admitted that in his case the satisfactory conditions are due in part to some of the recent improvements, including the addition of new departments and the waging of a rather lively advertising campaign. However, he added that there were no secrets about these methods and other grocers could use them with as good results.

The sensational press is held responsible in a large part for the financial panic by Mr. Callanan, and he declares that if he were the Commissioner of Police he would have ordered the police to seize the offending papers and destroy the copies that were offered for sale on the streets.

A pleasing instance of the good feeling that may be maintained among men who are in some respects competitors is shown by the Vesey street grocer in adding the confectionery of Park & Tilford to his candy department which he lately started. He says that many have been asking why he put in stock the candy of a firm that are competitors in general groceries. The answer of Mr. Callanan was that any firm which for years has had the reputation of keeping and selling only good groceries would certainly make good candies if it made any and that is his reason for selling this firm's candy.

More than $1,000,000 have been expended in advertising Karo Corn Syrup, according to a brief filed with the Department of Agriculture by the Corn Products Co., in arguing that it should be allowed to continue the use of the name used in the past to designate the product. It is added that the labels on hand cost $250,000 and would be a loss if it became necessary to change the name. It is expected that a decision of the question as to whether corn syrup or glucose is to be the title will be made in the immediate future.

One of the points raised in the brief is that a German syrup made from potatoes may be introduced here as a competitor of the corn syrup and if such products were all to be labeled glucose it would be unfair to the corn syrup, which actually is made from corn. The department, it is said, made a tentative ruling some time ago that the product really is glucose, the distinguishing elements of corn being eliminated in the process of manufacture, but the ruling was not officially published and thus far no effort has been made to put it into practical effect.

The importers of food products have won something of a victory, as the Department of Agriculture has decided that it is not essential to have labels printed in English. Regulation 17 has been modified so as to read that the labels should be in English. The word "should" is substituted as a recommendation in place of the mandatory "shall."

Before the regulation was modified the importers had threatened to appeal to the courts. They claimed that there is nothing in the food law itself to justify the regulation requiring the exclusive use of English. In support of the rule, it was said that the use of labels printed in other languages than English will open the door to many kinds of deception. An effort may be made some time to amend the law so as to require English labels, but until that is done the labels in other languages are not prohibited.

With the coming of the new year the local associations of grocers will get more active in a number of directions. The Legislature of the State will be in session in a few days and the grocers, retail as well as wholesale, have learned that it pays to keep a close watch on what the legislators are doing and to note what they are not doing. The Wife's Liability and the Pure Food Bills which were passed by the last Legislature and were vetoed by the Governor will again be considered, and the question will be as to whether they can be so modified as to meet the Governor's approval as well as that of the legislators. The vetoes of the bills were surprises.

The object that was sought in presenting the food bill last year was to make the State law harmonize with the provisions of the national law. The Governor, it is understood, has no objection to this general purpose, but did not like some features of the bill as it was drawn, but hope is entertained that another bill can be prepared that will meet a better fate.

To the Wife's Liability Bill of last year the Governor offered the objection that the law as it stands gives sufficient remedy to protect the tradesmen. The grocers think that he did not appreciate the extent of their losses through extending credit to families whose assets are all in the wife's name. The law holds the husband responsible and in these cases suits against him are a useless expense adding to the grocer's loss.

The new officers of the New York Retail Grocers' Union will be installed at a smoker to be given Monday evening, January 6th, in Vienna Hall. The installing officer will be Wm. H. Steinkamp, the counsel of the association. During the evening a vaudeville programme will be presented and there will be a drawing for a Royal Electric Coffee Mill donated by the A. J. Deer Co., the manufacturers. August Eitzen is the chairman of the Committee of Arrangements.

The money of the Brooklyn Retail Grocers' Horse Insurance Fund is tied up temporarily in the Borough Bank, which closed its doors some time ago. The amount in the fund is something less than $1,000, and it is believed that in time most of it will be obtained from the bank. Pending this a temporary plan has been adopted by the association so that all losses caused by the death of horses are to be met as promptly as usual. A statement was recently received by the association from the State Insurance Superintendent which showed that out of twenty-five companies organized since 1889 to insure live stock this is the only one that has been successful, the others having gone under.

There are 147 members who carry insurance on their horses in this association. In the past year

XXIV.—Good vs. Poor Sellers.

There are only two kinds of merchandise. One that sells, and one that doesn't.

Few retailers are able to run their stores without carrying both kinds, however, and in some stores the latter predominates.

It seems to be a mighty safe rule of business to always buy the goods which are already selling, watch closely and never allow your stock of the good sellers to run low. Cut the poor seller until he moves and then keep him out of stock, but never allow yourself to make the mistake of running out of the good seller in order to force the sale of the poor seller.

Too many retailers adopt this policy, and the first thing they know they have nothing but poor sellers in stock and no customers left. They have all gone to some other store to trade, where they can buy what they want.

Nothing makes money for the retailer as fast as quick-selling goods, even though the percentage of profit may be small. It makes a quick turn of the money and no dead stock, and those are the conditions of successful merchandising. The closer you can hold to that rule the better merchant you are, and the only way to do it is to sell dead stock at whatever price it will bring, and never allow your store to run short of good sellers.

F. A. P.

it paid ten losses varying from $50 to nearly $200. The average liability on a horse is $113.04.

Antonio Perniciaro, an Italian grocer at 363 First avenue, sent for the police Wednesday night, and they arrested a man said to be a relative of the grocer on the charge of attempted extortion. The grocer said that inside of a year he has received fourteen Black Hand letters, and once a bomb was thrown from an elevated train and nearly blew up his store. He got a letter Wednesday demanding money and at night his relative called and asked for $50. Instead of giving the money the grocer sent for the police. The prisoner was held in $1,000 bail for examination.

E. Naumburg & Co., of this city, were among the signers of the petition of creditors which resulted in the appointment of temporary receivers for the wholesale grocery firm of Adler & Co. at New Orleans. It is said here that the firm will probably be able to meet all obligations and to resume business.

Even Want Pure Food in South Africa.

Correspondent Sends Some Data as to Inspecting Foods in Cape Town. Powdered Egg Business a Coming Industry.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
Dec. 26, 1907.

The fad for food inspection, if such it can be called, has extended even to South Africa. Consul-General J. G. Lay, of Cape Town, sends some data regarding the inspection of canned goods entering that territory. I extract from this data the following:—

> During the year, a fairly large number of samples of tinned foodstuffs were examined, chiefly from cargoes which arrived at the Cape Town docks. A small proportion of "blown" tins were found in many instances, these being easily recognized by the official inspector; some brands of imported goods contained more bad tins than others, but in most cases they were the result of imperfect soldering. One special brand of tinned sausages, among which a very large quantity of bad tins were found, appeared to have been imperfectly sterilized before the tins were finally closed up, as no break nor leak could be found in the tins.
> The contents of some hundreds of unblown tins of various American canned goods were carefully examined, both microscopically and by cultural experiments, but no noxious nor foreign material could be demonstrated. So far, our experience goes to show that much of the adverse criticism regarding this class of foodstuff has been grossly exaggerated. The vast majority of tinned goods imported into this colony appear to be perfectly wholesome and desirable articles of food. "Blown" tins are, as a rule, due to accident, and give such timely warning to one's senses that I am perfectly certain no one would be in danger of consuming the contents.

Consul Thomas H. Norton, in a report from Chemnitz, Germany, states that much interest is felt among German chemists charged with food investigation over the reported degree of success which has attended efforts to preserve eggs by desiccation. The process was invented by a chemist of Victoria, Australia. The results obtained have been so satisfactory that the Farmers' and Settlers' Co-operative Society, of Sydney, has erected an extensive plant for the manufacture, on a large scale, of "egg powder." The process is simple. Eggs freed from the shells are dried at the relatively low temperature of 54.5 degrees C. (130 degrees F.). The operation can be rapidly executed in containers kept at this temperature, from which the air has been exhausted, and from which likewise the aqueous vapor is withdrawn as fast as given off by evaporation from the eggs. The advantage of this method consists in the fact that there is no alteration in the chemical composition of the eggs. There is simply a loss of the greater part of the water held mechanically in combination. When thoroughly desiccated and brought by pulverization into the state of coarse powder the egg material can be preserved for an indefinite period in ordinary packages if kept in a dry place. The eggs are "reconstituted" by the simple addition of water to the dry powder, the resultant mass being quite indistinguishable from newly beaten-up eggs. Before the method was accepted as a basis for industrial exploitation, it was submitted to exhaustive critical tests by the Victorian Department of Agriculture, which demonstrated that purity, ease of digestion, flavor, etc., were entirely unaffected by the operations of desiccation, preservation for a long period, and reconstitution by the addition of water, provided that fresh eggs were employed at the outset.

The Dog May Bite

Honestly, you will be much more likely to succeed by pushing Hotel Astor Coffee than by pushing a blend of your own.

We have been in coffee blending for many years. Obviously, we must know more about it than you do. And then Hotel Astor Coffee has been tried on the dog—the hardest dog to please in the United States—the patrons of the most exclusive hotels of New York City. The dog pronounced it good at once, and with the stamp of weighty approval upon it we offer it to you.

When you blend your own coffee the dog you try it on is your own customers—that's risky; the dog may bite.

A perfect blend of superfine coffee. For the very finest trade.

Respectfully Submitted to the Roth Packing Co.

The "Grocery World" respectfully submits to the John C. Roth Packing Co. that they are making a mistake in running advertisements like the following to consumers:—

DOVE BRAND HAMS

Are everywhere. All grocers keep them, though they may be kept in the background in order to sell a cheaper ham. Don't let that influence you for a moment! If you want a high-grade ham, call for Dove Brand and you will get it. Do not stand any evasion. Insist upon Dove Brand, and don't be imposed upon through substitution. These hams are produced by methods which insure supreme excellence in purity and flavor. It costs us 40 per cent. more to cure them in the old-time, legitimate way, but you get 50 per cent. more in quality, provided you insist.

The reason you are making a mistake, gentlemen, is this: Grocers see these advertisements, and they don't like them. How could they like an insinuation that they would cheat their customers by palming upon them an inferior product? Even if it were true it is poor policy to say so, for two reasons: First, you anger the grocer and arouse him to work against you, and in such a contest he will always have more influence with his customers than you will; and second, you arouse the entire trade, guilty and innocent alike, by making your charge general.

Remember this, which is almost too fundamental to need to be told: You can always get more favors, more fairness, more everything, from a friend than an enemy, and it seems like bad business to make enemies among the men upon whom you must depend to distribute your products.

Hard Times for Mail Order House.

These be melancholy days for the large mail-order houses, meaning particularly Sears, Roebuck & Co., of Chicago. Indicted by the United States Government, its stock heavily slumped, and its business so reduced, by the loss of public confidence and the money troubles together, that the concern feels compelled to offer more expensive premiums for orders than have ever been known before.

In a circular just issued Sears, Roebuck & Co. offer premiums for orders amounting to $50, $100, $170 and $500, which are quite unprecedented in their apparent expensiveness. For instance, for $500 worth of orders a piano is offered!

This premium offer gives some insight into the "small profits" of the mail-order houses. Assuredly a profit is still being made even with the premium included; otherwise the concern would prefer to keep its goods. The piano given with $500 could scarcely cost less than $100, and even at that it would be close to trash. Which means that Sears, Roebuck & Co. can seemingly lop 20 per cent. off its price and presumably still make a profit.

The Business Lie.

The "Grocery World" has once or twice discussed the new type of falsehood which modern business methods have bred: the business lie; a statement which judged by ordinary standards would be a flat falsehood, yet which when told in the course of business becomes merely a necessary and justifiable suppression of the truth.

The large Trusts and combines tell these lies a hundred times a day. Witness the Tobacco Trust's several times reiterated statement that it had no connection with the chain of cigar stores which does business under the name of the United Cigar Stores Co. Yet at one of last week's sessions of the Governmental inquiry into the Tobacco Trust's methods, held in New York, the following testimony was given:—

J. G. Whelan, president of the United Cigar Stores Co., was then called to the stand and examined by Mr. McReynolds. Mr. Whelan stated that the United Cigar Stores Co. had been organized in 1901 by his efforts. Previously the witness had been in the retail cigar business in Syracuse. He had consulted with officers of the American Tobacco Co. about starting the United Cigar Stores Co., but got no encouragement. However, he went ahead on his own account. The first store of the United Company was at 84 Nassau street. The company has now 408 stores throughout the country and it had probably closed about fifty stores. The cities in which the company had stores were New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Pittsburg, Providence, Springfield, Buffalo, Rochester, Cleveland, Toledo, Cincinnati, Chicago, Indianapolis, Minneapolis, St. Paul, San Francisco, Oakland, Los Angeles, Spokane, Seattle, Portland, Houston and Galveston. In New York it has 163 stores.

November 2, 1901, the witness said, the United Company had sold 57 per cent. of the stock to the American Tobacco Co. The company had been started with a paid-up capital of $2,500, which had been increased to $52,000 when the transaction was made with the American Company. The stock had been transferred in the name of Mr. Averett so the ownership of the company by the American Company was not revealed by the United Company's books.

Which means, obviously, that every time the Tobacco Trust said, since 1901, it had no connection with the United Cigar Stores Co. it lied. The officials who dictated and gave out the lie may not have called it that, but that's what it was nevertheless.

We shall never be as decent as we ought to be until we cease to have one code of honesty for private and another for public life.

The Legal Status of Modern Ice Cream

The Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Department discusses modern ice cream in the latest issue of its bulletin, reflecting severely upon the fact that in this day no ice "cream" is made of cream, but more often of milk. The Pennsylvania Commissioner takes the position, as do most food authorities, that ice cream which is made wholly of milk, or partly of milk and partly of cream, is a fraud on the consumer, who when she asks for ice cream expects to get ice cream.

The "Grocery World" does not believe this argument to be sound. It is admitted that if a consumer when she asked for ice cream had in her mind a definite picture of a product made wholly of frozen cream, then she is defrauded when Pennsylvania Attorney-General Says Food Law Violators Can be Jailed.

Renders an Opinion to the Dairy and Food Department that Where Defendants Fail to Appeal From Magistrate's Decision or to Pay Their Fine, They May Be Imprisoned.

The trade has been somewhat aroused during the week by an opinion rendered the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Department by Attorney-General Todd, as to the legal rights of the department in collecting the penalty imposed by the new State food act of 1907, from defendants without sufficient property to pay it. The Attorney-General says if a defendant fails to pay his fine or take an appeal he can be sent to jail.

The food law of 1907 abolishes the criminal fine which was imposed by the old food law of 1895 and imposes simply a civil penalty which is supposed to be collected as other debts are collected. The question has arisen whether the punishment clause of the law can be defeated by the fact that the defendant is without property in excess of $300, a condition which would surely defeat the collection of any ordinary debt. Several Philadelphia cases took this turn, and the Food Commissioner appealed to the Attorney-General. That official decides that where a defendant neither appeals from a magistrate's decision nor pays his fine, he can be imprisoned on account of its nonpayment. The opinion is extremely important and will vitally affect the enforcement of the food law in all sections of the State.

given something made of milk. But no such picture exists. Ice cream in the average person's mind means a frozen, flavored substance, of which the foundation is milk or cream. As to whether it is made altogether of cream, or of half cream and half milk, or even of all milk, the "Grocery World" contends that the consumer never thinks. Accordingly she is not deceived and there is no fraud.

It is clear, however, that there is no excuse whatever for loading ice cream with cheap gelatines and other fillers, in order to seem to supply it with a body that the milk or cream should itself give.

Ignore Leaf Style In Buying Tea.

So Says a Well-known Chicago Tea Expert. One Reason Why United States is Not a Tea Drinking Country Is that Grocers Are Not Particular Enough about Quality of Tea They Sell.

Why is it that in England tea is a national beverage?

Why is it that Russia consumes more tea than any nation on the face of the globe, with the exception of England and countries where teas are grown?

Why is it that the consumption of tea in the United States of America remains at a low percentage per capita?

Such questions are easily answered. In the countries first mentioned the quality of good tea is thoroughly understood and insisted upon, while in the United States the consumer is only too apt to take whatever is handed out to him. You cannot name a line of merchandise that so many persons are dissatisfied with as is the case with tea. The sooner the merchant realizes that there is quality in high-grade tea and that he cannot expect the profit on tea to make up the deficit of all the other merchandise he sells, the sooner will the discontented consumer be won over to a friendly feeling towards the consumption of tea.

I do not mean that all dealers always try to foist a poor article on their customers—there are many doing their utmost to obtain values for their trade, but too often the craze for giving premiums, such as cheap china, pictures and rocking chairs, gets into the blood and induces some to turn out the cheapest kind of tea or better called "stuff" in order to include a present at the price asked.

It needs no argument to convince that under such conditions not even reasonable tea value can be given, although the premiums be what they may, and the purchaser be a judge of the same, about the tea itself, the least said the better. Good tea, like good meat, good butter and all good foods costs more than the poor article, but gives many times the pleasure to the palate, and at a comparatively small difference in price. Furthermore, the matter of health enters largely into the question. No premium of whatever value would induce a housekeeper to take bad meat, for instance, while a low grade of tea, lacking in true tea flavor and with its essential oils turned rancid or fishy, is just as bad. Added to which frequently is a large percentage of coloring matter to hide the dead leaf, abundant in this grade.

There are few things quite so pleasant and stimulating as the high-grade article and fortunately there are some grocers and importers who insist upon having the best and are endeavoring to educate their trade to the appreciation of pure high-grade tea.

Aiding this result, an air-tight canister to protect the tea from outside influence so that it will not absorb the impurities prevalent in many grocery stores is most important, and the grading should be by the best of experts. This combination gives the grocer a perfect tea department.

In conclusion, if a grocer will buy correctly, handle correctly, and sell correctly, ignore the style of the leaf and look to the drinking value only, he will quickly regain many of the lost tea consumers and make himself a unit in the great battle to increase the per capita consumption of tea in the United States of America.

Do Close Business in Months to Come

National Secretary Green Says Hard Times Are Not Over and Retail Grocers Should Sail Close to the Wind in Every Way. Growing Opposition to Parcels Post. Close Competition in England. New Associations Being Formed.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Cleveland, Ohio, Dec. 26, 1907.

Business conditions are rather critical at the present time. It will need care, judgment, and the best that the individual can bring to make his business pay. Where can I improve on my methods of last year? Can I effectively reduce my expense account? Can I do business in the same manner as formerly? How can I stop the leaks? These and many more questions will present themselves to you. Stop and think.

To the grocers of the United States I would advise careful buying; closer attention to detail; closer accounts; careful credits. A merchant who has learned to say "No" is in the best position.

In the last few years men have become careless. This stringency, if that is what they call it, did not come in a week. It will not leave for many months. Some may call this pessimism. It is optimism. The grocer who can see the true situation and profit by it will come out ahead.

Our organization has come to the front very materially this year. Men talk about it, attend the meetings, give their attention and influence to it. If we have accomplished much in the past, much more is expected now. The officers feel the responsibility and are doing all they can to merit the confidence and assistance of the membership.

With best wishes for futnre prosperity, a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Letters continue to arrive at this office in regard to the position of the National Association of Retail Grocers upon the parcels post.

Not only do these inquiries come from the grocers and grocers' organizations, but from people in all lines of retail trade.

Many of our Congressmen have come out openly and declared their intention of opposing any measure of this kind during the next session of Congress.

Others have not publicly declared their opposition who are known to be opposed to it.

The outlook at the present time for any amendment to the postal laws along this line is not very encouraging to its supporters, but our position can only be maintained by energetic and vigorous work.

The retail hardware men, jewelers, furniture men, and almost all other crafts besides the retail grocers have taken it upon themselves to oppose it.

It is noticeable at this time that there has been no outward demonstration other than the Postmaster-General's to amount to anything in favor of such a proposition, but that does not mean that forces are not at work creating and crystalizing sentiment in its favor. The wholesale interests are beginning to realize that it is not to their best interests that this kind of legislation be passed. In connection with this is the commercial travelers of the United States, who feel that it will materially interfere with their business affairs.

Whether the sentiment created will be strong enough to keep Congress for any length of time from passing any measure along these lines remains to be seen, and it is for this purpose that the attention of the trade in general is called to the fact that nothing should be left undone to prevent the passage of any such legislation in the near future.

In these days of close competition among the American retailers, and especially grocers, we are apt to think that in no place is competition so keen as in that which we live and do business, but by an extended observation any one can plainly see that conditions do not vary in any part of the Union. There may be different methods of doing business and a larger variety of merchandise in some places than others, but men in our line of business seem to be all alike, and not only is this so with us, but a review of the English grocery journals would lead us to believe that conditions there among the retail grocers are no better or different than those existing here.

The "Grocery World," published in London, Eng., in its issue of November 28th, describes conditions existing among the grocers of Birmingham. We quote from the paper:—

> When no tea can be purchased in the wholesale market at less than 1s. 0½d., (26 cents) it can scarcely be described as fair competition for grocers to sell any at a shilling (25 cents). This is what the Birmingham and Midland counties have been trying to bring home to the minds of the directors of large trading concerns and individual grocers in the city.
> An effort has been made to secure the co-operation of these gentlemen in abolishing the sale of shilling tea, but we regret to say with little success. At a meeting of the council last Wednesday, it was reported that whilst the advance made by the association had been well received in some quarters, it had been rebuffed in others. The only thing that remains for members to do is to show an example to unscrupulous competitors by adhering strictly to prices that yield them a profit. If they show that quality is their first consideration, their customers will not grudge a little more than a shilling a pound for their tea.

It is very satisfying to note the work that is being done along the line of organizing new associations. Advices received from almost every State where there is an organization is that new local associations are being formed every week.

Word has just been received from Wisconsin that never before has the work of organization been pushed to such an extent as it is at the present time. Eleven new associations have been formed, containing about 300 members within a short space of time. For some time past correspondence has been kept up between the different towns in the State of Kentucky and the national officers. Unless something unforeseen happens, a new State association will be formed in Kentucky January 14th and 15th.

Colorado Grocers Convicted of Maintaining Trust.

United States Court Says They Have Been Carrying on an Illegal Combination and Enjoins Them From All Future Efforts to Control the Price.

The Retail Grocers' Association of Colorado received somewhat of a setback during the week, when the United States Circuit Court declared that they were maintaining an illegal combination in restraint of trade and issued an injunction forbidding all future efforts to control the price.

The decision is the outcome of prosecution started by the Attorney-General of the State on complaints that the association of that section has been setting prices for commodities and had resorted to measures to enforce their rulings to such an extent that the association had partaken enough of the nature of a trust to bring it under the ban of the court.

Year's Foodstuff Imports Increase, Exports Decrease.

Food Products Share in Most Wonderful Year Since Foreign Commerce Began. Increase Mostly Shown in Imports of Coffee, Cocoa and Sugar.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
Dec. 27, 1907.

The foreign commerce of the United States in 1907 makes a new record both as to imports and exports. While but eleven months' figures are yet available, the record for that period so far exceeds that of any corresponding period of earlier years as to justify the statement that the total of both imports and exports will be larger for the calendar year 1907 than in any preceding year in the history of our commerce. The figures at hand justify the estimate that the imports of the full year will exceed 1,400 million dollars and that the exports will probably exceed 1,900 million dollars.

The growth in the foreign commerce occurs chiefly in manufacturers' materials and manufactures. In foodstuffs there is a slight increase in the importations, but a decrease in exportations, as measured by values. Foodstuffs in a crude condition imported show an increase of about $20,000,000, and foodstuffs partly or wholly manufactured an increase of $17,000,000.

The principal foodstuffs showing an increase in importations are coffee, cocoa and sugar. Coffee imported in the ten months ending October, 1907, amounted in value to $60,500,000, against $52,750,000 during the corresponding period of last year; cocoa to $12,750,000, against $7,500,000 in the corresponding months of last year; sugar to $77,500,000, against $68,500,000 in the corresponding months of the preceding year, this increase in total value being due in part, however, to advanced prices, the quantity of sugar imported in the ten months ending October being 3,567,600,380 pounds, against 3,358,148,621 pounds in the corresponding months of last year. This, however, does not include the sugar brought from Hawaii and Porto Rico, which now forms an important factor in our sugar supply. The quantity of sugar brought from Hawaii in the ten months ending October, 1907, was 802,772,460 pounds, and from Porto Rico 406,899,661 pounds, neither the Hawaiian nor the Porto Rican sugar being included in the statement of imports, since Hawaii and Porto Rico are now customs districts of the United States and the merchandise from them is therefore no longer included in the statement of imports from foreign countries.

HOLT.

Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is best explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to the "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and value to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated will appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. BRECKENRIDGE.

Marrowfat Peas.

These are a very choice but late variety of peas, grow very tall, and have a sweet and very agreeable taste. When dried they have a wrinkled appearance.

Marsala Wine.

A Sicilian white wine, somewhat full-bodied, generally containing a high percentage of absolute alcohol.

Rather darker than sherry, it resembles second-class Madeira in color and in flavor. It is a good sound useful wine, and is much improved by age. Marsala is generally cheaper than sherry, which indeed it often replaces.

Meat Extracts, Essences and Juices.

These are mostly prepared by soaking chopped meat in water, and then gradually heating till partly dissolved, when about one-eighth of the weight of the meat will be drawn out into the water.

This solution is afterwards evaporated to a more or less pasty consistency, and about 30 pounds of meat is thus reduced to one pound.

It is claimed that this contains the principal salts and savory constituents of the meat, and it is therefore recommended for making beef tea, broths, soups, etc., by simply adding hot water and seasonings.

In preparing some extracts the residue of the meat is dried and powdered, and finally added to the juicy element.

Mocha Coffee.

This most esteemed of all coffees has long been cultivated in Arabia, and derives its name from the seaport town of Mocha or Mokha, in Yemen, Southern Arabia, whence much coffee is exported.

The two varieties of this coffee best known are the Long Berry, and the Short Berry, or Alexandrian. They are both somewhat small, the former is greyish-yellow in color, and gives a rich mellow liquor, the other is smaller and of a pale greenish-yellow tint, and the infusion is much the same as the other, but cleaner and more delicate. Beans of quite brown color are often noticeable among both sorts.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market is quiet, as it always is around the holidays, but there is absolutely no sign of weakness anywhere. Some business has been done during the week, and holders are looking forward to a good business in January, as stocks of tea, particularly low grades, are low. There have been no changes of any character during the week. The consumptive demand is moderate.

Coffee.

The coffee market has been deadly dull during the past week, owing to the holidays. Transactions have been very small, and prices, either options, or spot, show no change whatever. The receipts of Rio and Santos coffee at shipping points in Brazil still show a radical deficiency as compared with 1906. Lately they have hardly been equal even to the record of 1905. The demand for Brazil coffee is light. Mild coffee is steady and unchanged. Java and Mocha are steady and unchanged.

Sugar.

The raw sugar market has strengthened considerably during the past week. Europe has advanced, through some apparent tendency to speculate. The Cuban season is being badly interfered with by the rains and only thirteen factories are grinding, as against 112 at the same time last year. This, with some other collateral causes, is likely to cause a sharp shortage in raw sugar next month, and possibly an advance in the price of refined if it continues long enough. Refined sugar is unchanged for the week, and is in light demand

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup shows no change and is in fair demand. Sugar syrup is moderately active at ruling prices. New-crop molasses is now becoming a factor, and is wanted. Prices show no further change from the last advance. It has developed that of the current crop the proportion of first grades will be light, while seconds and thirds will be plentiful.

Fish.

The fish market has been very dull during the week, though without any weakness. Mackerel are quiet, but all grades are firm. After the turn of the year, when the demand for mackerel reopens, the scarcity in Norway fish may become pronounced. Cod, hake and haddock are in moderate demand at ruling prices. Salmon is steady and quiet. Domestic sardines are in light demand at unchanged prices. Most holders, however, are hinting that an advance may come after January 1st, owing to light stocks. Imported sardines are still firm, high and quiet.

Canned Goods.

There has been no change in the tomato situation during the past week. There is some buying for immediate wants, at prices that show no particular indication of hardening as yet. There is some reason to believe, however, that a considerable proportion of the jobbing trade will be obliged to come into the market early in the year, and if they do the price of tomatoes will probably advance, unless the report of the 1907 pack shows a much larger production than is expected Corn is very dull and unchanged. Peas remain on the same basis as for many weeks. Peaches are scarce and dull at ruling prices. Apples are unchanged on last week's basis and not very active. The line of small Baltimore canned goods is dull and unchanged. California canned goods are inactive in first hands and prices show no change.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans seem to have settled down for the present on a basis of $2.25 both on spot and to come forward. The demand is fair. Marrows are quoted at the same price, and are also wanted to some extent. California limas are in good demand at 5¾ cents on spot and a shade less than that to come forward. Yellow split peas are unchanged on a basis of $6.75 per barrel in a large way. Green splits show an advance of $1 per barrel within the last ten days. Green and Scotch peas are firm and unchanged.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are moderately active and show some underlying strength. Eastern markets are still a fraction below the coast, but some of the coast holders are talking strong, and after the first of the year, if a good brisk demand develops, prices may do

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

better. Peaches are dull and unchanged, as are apricots. Currants are still moving, though the big demand is over. Apples are unchanged and not especially strong. Raisins show no important change for the week, though some Eastern holders of seeded are quoting ¼ cent lower. The coast is a little above the present Eastern parity and feeling stronger. The recent declines in the price of seeded raisins have increased the consumption very materially.

Butter.

The butter market is still in a very firm condition. The receipts of fancy fresh are extremely light, and are immediately absorbed on arrival at top prices. The above conditions applies both to fancy prints and under-grade solids. Stocks of butter in storage are being reduced satisfactorily and the market is very healthy. If there is any change in the near future it will probably be an advance.

Eggs.

The receipts of new-laid eggs continue to increase, and in consequence the market has declined 2 cents per dozen. Stocks of storage eggs are gradually decreasing and prices show no change. The future price of fresh eggs depends on the receipts, and if any change comes it will probably be a decline. Storage eggs will likely remain about the same, however.

Provisions.

The trade in smoked meats is dull, and prices remain the same as a week ago. As values are now on a decidedly low level, they are scarcely likely to go lower. The consumptive demand will hardly increase for two or three weeks. Both pure and compound lard is unchanged, and the market is steady. There will probably not be any change in prices during the coming week. Dried beef, barrel pork and canned meats are unchanged and dull.

Cheese.

The consumptive demand for cheese is at present very light. Stocks are light and prices high. Under grades seem just as scarce as the better grades. There is probably not likely to be any change in prices for some time.

Green Fruit.

Apples, Kings, $4 to $5.50 per barrel; Baldwins, $2.75 to $3.75 per barrel; Hulbersons, $3.75 to $4.50 per barrel; Greenings, $4 to $5 per barrel; Pippins, $3 to $3.75 per barrel; Spitz, $3.75 to $4.50 per barrel; Spy, $3 to $4 per barrel; bulk, 60 to 90 cents per bushel, demand fair; bananas. Produce.

Nuts.

Peanuts, green, choice, 4¼ cents per pound; fancy, 5 cents per pound; jumbo, 6½ cents per pound; roasted, choice, $1 per bushel; fancy, $1.25 per bushel; jumbo, $1.50 per bushel, demand fair; almonds, 19 to 20 cents per pound; Brazils, 11¾ cents per pound; filberts, 10¾ cents per pound; pecans, 11 cents per pound; walnuts, grenobles, 12 cents per pound; marbots, 13 cents per pound, demand fair.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Baltimore Canned Goods.

No. 1.

Some days fairly active with numerous small orders for assorted goods, with an order or two sandwiched in among them for a carload or two of tomatoes, and, again, other days when it was dull enough all along the line—that's the history of the week in this market. The general trend is, however, in the direction of an improvement in the canned goods business when the new year opens up and inventory time is over and out of the way. That feeling is based chiefly on the fact that the Western as well as the Eastern and Northern jobbers have continued to buy canned goods in this market in small quantities, of course, for immediate shipment during the last sixty days, while the trouble in the money market was at the worst, indicating thereby light stocks on hand and actual requirements. That the canned goods market has suffered, perhaps, the least of any line of merchandise through all these trying, troublous times, is a fact well worth consideration. In any ordinary season the publication of the annual statistics of the pack of tomatoes, corn and peas showing any increase over the previous year has heretofore always, without exception, caused a weakening in the market for those articles and usually a decline in prices. This season the pack of tomatoes has no doubt, exceeded that of any previous season, but the knowledge of that fact was public property a month or more ago and it had no effect whatever on the market values of that article for the reason that the extraordinary demand for the goods caused the canners to ship them almost as fast as packed and the great bulk of them have gone into consumption, the warehouses here being almost bare of them, a most unusual thing for this time in the season. Tomatoes are worth your attention. Corn and peas will easily take care of themselves. Sweet potatoes, spinach, kraut and cove oysters were the articles in demand this week. Fruits of all kinds are very dull. Quotations were practically the same at the close to-day as in the week previous.

Below we give you an interesting table of the quotations on tomatoes throughout the year 1907, showing the range of the prices on all sizes for each month. Next week we will give you our annual table of the opening, high, low and closing prices of every article in the whole list of Baltimore canned goods throughout the year:—

January, No. 2s, 82½ cents; No. 3s, 95 cents; No. 10s, $3.60.

February, No. 2s, 82½ cents; No. 3s, 92½ to 95 cents; No. 10s, $3.60.

March, No. 2s, 80 to 82½ cents; No. 3s, 90 to 92½ cents; No. 10s, $3.60.

April, No. 2s, 77½ to 80 cents; No. 3s, 87½ to 90 cents; No. 10s, $3.50 to $3.60.

May, No. 2s, 80 to 82½ cents; No. 3s, 85 to 90 cents; No. 10s, $3.50 to $3.60.

June, No. 2s, 82½ to 90 cents; No. 3s, 92½ cents to $1; No. 10s, $3.60 to $3.80.

July, No. 2s, 65 to 90 cents: No. 3s, 90 cents to $1; No. 10s, $3.80.

August, No. 2s, 62½ to 65 cents; No. 3s, 82½ to 87½ cents; No. 10s, $2.60 to $2.85.

September, No. 2s, 65 to 67½ cents; No. 3s, 85 to 87½ cents; No. 10s, $2.75 to $3.

October, No. 2s, 70 cents; No. 3s, 87½ cents; No. 10s, $3.

November, No. 2s, 60 to 67½ cents; No. 3s, 80 to 85 cents; No. 10s, $2.60 to $2.85.

December, No. 2s, 60 to 62½ cents; No. 3s, 80 to 82½ cents; No. 10s, $2.60 to $2.70.

Commencing January 1st, bear in mind the transportation lines will put into force the new table of minimum weights governing carload shipments. A minimum carload of canned goods will then be 36,000 pounds, instead of 30,000 pounds as at present, and it will require the following minimum number of cases of each size tins to make a full carload:—

1,440 cases 2-dozen No. 1 tins at 25 pounds to the case.

800 cases 4-dozen No. 1 tins at 47 pounds to the case.

818 cases 2-dozen No. 2 tins at 44 pounds to the case.

538 cases 2-dozen No. 3 tins at 67 pounds to the case.

668 cases 2-dozen No. 10 tins at 54 pounds to the case.

360 cases 1-dozen No. 10 tins at 100 pounds to the case.

No. 2.

The market shows no change. The demand is fair; some orders are coming in each day. In fact occasionally we have quite a run of orders, though there is nothing sustained or snappy about the buying. As a matter of fact, if there were any large stocks of tomatoes on hand and if the packers were pressed to sell, it it quite likely prices would decline. The fact, however, that prices are not declining indicates a pretty good undertone as far as packers are concerned, and it is argued that if this condition continues for a reasonable time after the first of the year there may be a turn for the better. We have gone over the situation in this section pretty well and find comparatively light stocks in the hands of all the packers. This is true of almost every individual, and as far as we can see there is practically no packer in a position where he is forced to let go. Of course, it takes two to make a trade, but from the standpoint of stocks the tomato situation looks healthy.

The Baltimore oyster situation should be very interesting at the present time, and with a little more favorable trade conditions generally there is no doubt but what considerable business would be coming in for this line. We are quoting some cheap oysters, and we believe oysters can be bought to better advantage in Baltimore this year than in the South. This is a reversal of the usual conditions.

Imported Fish Products.

Business in this line is rather quiet and only goods intended for the holiday trade are finding ready sale just now.

Holland and Scotch Herrings.—Both are in good supply and in small demand and prices are decidedly in buyers' favor.

Irish Fat Herrings.—In short supply, good demand and prices tending higher.

Irish Mackerel.—Rather scarce, but in poor demand.

Norway Mackerel.—Dull, but firmly held. Stocks are rather small.

Stockfish continues in good demand, with slightly higher prices. Supplies only moderate.

Anchovies.—Rather scarce and in usual demand.

Imported Oil Sardines.—No change in the situation. They are scarce and high and hardly any supplies coming forward from Europe.

Sprats.—Fishing has started in France, but was suddenly interrupted by stormy weather. Some orders had been booked at prices quite some higher than last season's.

Olive Oil.—Fine qualities are scarce and high. The new crop promises well, but there is no likelihood of any change in price before March or April, when the new crop of olive oil will be ready for shipment.

Greek Black Olives.—New crop is now coming in and shows very fine quality. Prices about the same as last season.

Sugar.

The market is strong. A big business has been transacted in new-crop Cubas. It is estimated that over 200,000 bags have been sold. The sugars will be shipped in January.

The new sugar season has commenced. It has opened at prices that yield a good profit. Cuba is making sugar, Porto Rico has started, and the first shipments from San Domingo are on the way. Through a combination of good factors the planters are getting higher prices than they expected. European markets that advanced and have since held firm and the delayed grinding of the Cuba crop with estimates that the output is liable to be substantially under that of 1907 have produced a situation that warranted better prices in the United States. Our refiners have been finishing up this season on reduced stocks and won't have any more than enough sugar to carry them through until their new-crop purchases arrive. It has been necessary for them to provide themselves with a good quantity of sugar for as early shipment as they could get, and they have had to pay the price asked. With conditions as they are to-day there is a good chance for an advance of at least 1-16 cent over present quotations. Early shipment sugar is worth something to the refiners; they want much more than they have purchased, and owners should hold on to the advantage now in their favor as long as they can. It will be quite a while yet before the new crops get under full headway, the arrivals during January at the United States ports won't be heavy, we expect a good business in refined after the first of the year—the country to-day not having any excess supplies in dealers' hands—and there is no necessity of cutting away values until conditions demand it. The Cuban planters complain every year in regard to the prices they obtain for their product. They claim that the net result at the end of each season hardly pays them for the labor and capital they invest in the industry. Next year offers a good chance for them to make their end of the business pay. It should be a good sugar year. The world won't have more sugar than it needs, estimates of many crops have been reduced, and a higher range in prices should prevail. If the Cuban planters will exercise patience, keep their supplies in the island until sold, and not try to force sales at New York, we won't have a market during the first five months of the year ranging from 25 to 45 cents per 100 pounds under the prices made by the rest of the world. It is a good deal to ask, but improvement in the marketing methods of the Cuban planters is the essential point and each step forward they can make in this direction means added revenue to the amount they receive for their yearly crop. Sugar is not a luxury. The whole world needs it, it is cheap enough, and there is no reason why any planter should lose money in the production.

Refined Sugar.—The demand has been fair in withdrawals from contracts and some new business has been doing, with all refiners holding firm at unchanged prices; that is, f. o. b. New York net the American Sugar Refining Co., Howell, and Arbuckle, basis of granulated 4.70 cents; the Federal 4.60 cents, less 1 per cent. cash. The American Sugar Refining Co., New Orleans, is selling on a basis of 4.60 cents, less 1 per cent. cash, to Southern markets and to other territory at 10 points higher.

Domestic Beet Sugar.—Granulated 4.60 cents, less 1 per cent. cash, plus New York or New Orleans refiners' prepaid freight rate.

Spices.

The market is fairly steady, with no important changes in prices. We look for a large demand after the turn of the year, which should have the tendency to advance prices.

Pepper.—Demand fair, prices being irregular. We look for some large buying after January 1st, which should stimulate the market, as stocks are very low.

Nutmegs.—Demand has increased. Some large sales have been reported by holders who held stock awaiting an advance in the market.

Cayennes are steady and prices are now exceedingly low.

Cloves are very uncertain, owing to the immense stock that has been received at Zanzibar since August last.

Pimento (Allspice) is steady, but unchanged; demand very fair.

Mace.—Demand active; prices steady without change.

Cassias.—There has been practically no change in the market during the week, the demand being fair.

Gingers.—Normal demand noted. We look for an increase from now on. Prices are holding steady.

Seeds.—Caraway is reported slightly higher abroad. Poppy seed is steady but unchanged Coriander in demand at steady prices.

Rubbed sage and sweet herbs are selling well, prices remaining unchanged.

ASSOCIATION NEWS.

Minnesota.

A large proportion of the East Side, Minneapolis, Minn., have made an agreement among themselves to restrict credit among their customers.

The agreement, in full, is as follows:—

> Owing to the stringency of the financial market, and the shortening of credits from wholesale houses and their constant demands for their money when due, we, the grocers of the East Side are forced to take similar action in order to meet their demands and protect our credit. We ask our patrons to pay promptly and in full when bills are due. We cannot carry balances and meet our obligations, so please don't ask for it.
> In accordance with the above, we, the undersigned grocers and butchers, hereby agree that on and after December 9, 1907, we shall insist on settlement in full of accounts when due and we all positively agree to carry no balances.
> No accounts will be opened under any circumstances where a clear receipt from former creditors cannot be shown. Bills will become due and payable according to terms agreed upon when account is opened, but in no case will credit be extended for a period longer than thirty days.
> We further agree to report promptly to the credit department of the Minneapolis Retail Grocers' Association any account which may become delinquent in order that each signer of this agreement may be properly protected.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. This is pretty snappy advertising. Several of the batch, however, which I do not reproduce, are too general. There's an olive oil advertisement which reads this way: "Olive oil when it is pure is a good food and one you can enjoy. Our Nicelle oil is guaranteed pure by the Government. We have all sizes of cans and bottles." Why not give some of the sizes and the prices? An advertisement without price is really no advertisement at all; at best it is only half an advertisement.

The other advertisements reproduced above are all good little advertisements. Perhaps the heads could be sharpened up a little. "A Bargain in Malaga Grapes" is good, but plain "Grape Fruit" is commonplace. "Tone up on a Grape Fruit" would have been a little better. Try to write a head that shall contain a little more than the simple name of the goods, which, as I say, is commonplace. In advertisements as short and crisp as these, the name of the goods doesn't make as poor a head as it would ordinarily, as it fits in better with the style of these advertisements—brief, crisp, terse and snappy. But even with this style of an advertisement I think the head can be improved on.

New Brighton (Pa.) Grocers Would Abolish Future Buying.

Retail Grocers' Association of the Above Town Launches Campaign Against Present Method of Future Canned Goods Buying.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Erie, Pa., Dec. 26, 1907.

The Retail Grocers' Association of New Brighton has started a movement to abolish the present system of future buying, which if continued for five years longer and increasing as rapidly as during the past five years, they claim will make the jobber little more than a broker.

The New Brighton Association has also indorsed the resolutions of the DuBois Business Men's Exchange to the effect that pledges be secured from candidates for the State Legislature for the repeal of the present mercantile tax law.

This Tells the Tale

A product which has been on the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of all tests—the test of time. "Knight's Cooking Extracts" is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to tell why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no housewife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, if you sell Knight's Extracts we need say nothing more to you; if you don't, we want one order from you—we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and a good profit.

A Crack-a-Jack New Year's Resolution.

I heard a grocer make a New Year's resolution yesterday that I heartily commend to all you fellows.

He has a good clean store up in Carbon County, Pa.—a store that's made him some money and that'll make him some more if he'll tend to it. But he got a bee in his bonnet and went into some other things that stung him.

I guess from what he said they stung him pretty bad.

He said to me last week:—

"I ain't made a New Year's resolution for thirty years, but I'm going to make one this year."

"Good!" I said, "every man ought to let drink alone."

He laughed. "You know I don't need that sort of a resolution, you old rip!" he said, "though if I'd gone around with you more I probably would."

Almost like refined vaudeville, wasn't it?

"No, sir," he went on, "I'm going to make a 10-horse power resolution to tend to my own business this year."

"Until some 20-horse power scheme comes along," I observed. I knew something of his outside deals.

"All right," he replied, "you'll see. Uncle Bob has learned his little lesson and he knows it by heart. No more outside business for me. I'm done. I've got a good thing here that'll keep me as long as I need a living, and I'm a fool to bother with anything else!"

"My sentiments exactly," I said, "but usually a man has to get burnt once or twice before he finds it out."

"Well," he confessed, "I've got mine this year. I'd hate to tell you how much a certain deal I got into lost for me."

A whole lot of you fellows would be better off if you'd make the same resolution and stick to it. I know you. Your mouths are open for good schemes all the time.

I know exactly how it is. I've been there and dropped my little coin along with the rest of you.

You've been in the grocery business for say fifteen years. Your store's established. You do a good business; it makes you a living and a little more. It don't take much time or care—just runs along in the same old way year after year.

Well, you sort of get tired. Your mind aint fully occupied. The business don't fill it. Just when you're beginning to stretch yourself and yawn, and wish something would turn up, something does turn up.

Maybe it's a perfectly elegant scheme to raise hogs, like a friend of mine had handed to him in 1905. He was in exactly the position I describe. His store was running smoothly, he had some time and some money on his hands, and he sort of felt hungry to get something on the side.

Just then two benefactors happened along, looking for some deserving gentleman to take into the hog business. They both knew all about the business. One was the practical man, who knew how to raise enormous quantities of the most refined hogs from one papa and mamma, and the other was the outside man—he could sell at a profit all the hogs anybody could raise.

All they needed was money. My friend had seen the moon over the wrong shoulder the night before, and there was something coming to him, so the hog kings got up against him first and gave him their story

Oh, they loaded him up clear to the ears. How by saying a few magic words or something like that they could make hogs multiply something fierce, and how there was a hungry market for all that could be raised at a price per pound that would make the first year's profits $8,462.66!

As I said, my friend was after something on the side and he took the hog scheme on. He put up a thousand dollars and went in with 'em on equal terms—their two votes to his one; a fool thing to do in the very beginning.

They leased a place outside the town and began.

I don't believe I need go into the scheme. They built a lot of expensive buildings with steam heat in—that was part of their multiplication idea, I believe, and the thousand dollars soon went.

Then they came to him and said they were just in the midst of things and would have to have more money. So he indorsed their notes and got money from the bank.

At the end of the first year he had put in in cash or made himself responsible for $2,400. I ain't sure, but I believe he told me that up to that time they hadn't sold a single hog.

At any rate, he pulled out, but his $2,400 was gone. He had to pay the notes off, as all the firm had was a fool plant that I believe brought something like $200 when it was sold at auction.

That fellow's stuck so close to his grocery business since that you couldn't stick a pin between 'em.

Except here and there a lucky one, they all learn the same lesson.

Why, look how helpless you are when you get into these outside schemes. Almost always you're only asked to go in to put up the money. It's the other fellow who knows the business, whatever it is, and who's to give his time to it. You've got another business on your hands, you can't keep more than half in touch with the new venture, you're not posted on it, and you can't begin to control your partner, though you're responsible for everything he does.

You're like a cat in a strange garret.

I have known so many retail grocers to get into outside things, almost always to be burnt.

I don't mean such things as mining fakes now. I mean legitimate business deals, such as the hog bonanza.

One particularly bright fellow—as a grocer—went into the building business with a contractor. The contractor burnt the very hair off him. What did he know about building?

Another one went into the pigeon-raising business, another I remember went in for raising fancy chickens and selling eggs for $5 a dozen.

About a thousand went into raising Belgian hares when that craze was on.

Every one went in with a partner who was always the one who furnished the experience.

And oh, how they got burnt! Some never told me they got burnt, but I could think for myself when they dropped suddenly out of the side business and looked sour for a month.

Stick to your own store, boys. If prosperity gets monotonous, put in a new department and root for that.

Don't put your money into things you can't control, unless they've already made good and you've got some security that your interests are going to be decently taken care of.

If you'll make that as a resolution you'll be glad you did one year from now.

First Plum About to Drop in Unique Rebate Scheme.

First Check in Corn Products Co's 1906 Rebate Scheme to Be Forthcoming December 31st—Another Rebate to Be Offered to Those Who Buy Exclusively of the Company in 1908.

Buyers of glucose are waiting anxiously for their first rebate from the Corn Products Co., which it is expected will be paid on December 31st next. This rebate is in pursuance of the most unique rebating scheme that has ever been devised.

The checks which will be mailed glucose buyers on December 31st will be for sums representing 10 cents for every 100 pounds purchased during the last half of 1906. The plan was to give all buyers who bought only of the Corn Products Co. in 1907 the above rebate on all the goods bought in the last half of 1906. Within the last few days has come another proposition from the Corn Products Co. offering a similar rebate on the 1907 purchases to all who buy exclusively of the company in 1908.

Up to the present time the plan has amounted to comparatively little, as there has been very little competition for the Corn Products Co. to wish to save itself from. During the coming year, however, it is expected that some new glucose concerns will come into the market.

Stock Taking and Other Things.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Although I am in business a long time, I have never taken inventory, but am going to "tackle" it after January 1st.

Will you kindly tell me the best way to go about it? Also what is the best rule to tell what percentage it cost to do business? About what is the average cost of doing business in a retail grocery and market? And how to tell the average percentage I am making in profits? Am doing about $25,000 worth of business a year.

I appreciate and have a kindly feeling for the "Grocery World."

Yours truly,
JAY.

The stock of every grocery store should be taken at least once a year; in many particularly active stores it is taken every six months and sometimes every three months. Prior to stock taking the stock should be reduced to the lowest possible ebb, and all of the old and shop-worn stuff worked off that possibly can be. The stock should then be arranged as systematically as possible, as this greatly shortens the time necessary to take stock. By this is meant if canned goods are located at two places in the store they should be brought together. Once this is done, each shelf should be gone over and the contents written down, after which the prices can be added and the list counted up. This is really all there is to stock taking.

To calculate the cost of doing business, set down the various elements of cost: rent, or interest on the money invested if you own your own real estate, clerk hire, depreciation, cost of heat, light and all the other expenses you are under. When you have the sum of these and your gross business you can tell in one minute the percentage of cost. Having your percentage of cost and your selling prices, you can easily figure what you are making if you don't already know.

Dried Fruit and Nuts.

Allentown, Pa., Dec. 18, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Will you please let me know which are the largest wholesale houses of dried fruits, which of nuts, and especially of raisins? Please answer me as soon as possible.

Yours truly,
JAMES CASSONE.

V. L. Cavanna Co., 42 S. Delaware avenue, dried fruits, and T. A. James & Co., Inc., 12-14-16 Chestnut street, dried fruits and raisins; C. M. Taylor & Co., 158 Dock street, nuts, all of Philadelphia.

Your Profit and That's All.

Every grocer sells chocolate and cocoa—his customers must have it. No matter whose he sells, he makes his profit and no more. He has no good reason for recommending one brand instead of another, so he hands out what his customers ask for.

The Knickerbocker Chocolate Co., of New York, are giving grocers a real reason for trying to push the sale of Barker's Hasty Lunch Chocolate, Blue Ribbon and Bedford Cocoas. For making a point to give these particular goods to their trade when no special brand is asked for and for recommending them when some other brand is asked for.

They are the only chocolate manufacturers who are using their advertising appropriation to buy valuable merchandise to give to grocers to reward them for their efforts.

The quality of Barker's Hasty Lunch Chocolate Bedford and Blue Ribbon Cocoas cannot be excelled; they are certain to please everybody who is induced to buy them, and, still more important, every case of these goods carries Universal Coupons for the grocer. These coupons are exchangeable for almost any article of merchandise a grocer may want. They are the same as cash.

When it is possible for a grocer to sell not only as fine chocolate and cocoa as there is on the market and not only make his profit and please his trade, but get a roll-top desk, a new set of harness, standard scales, or even a new delivery wagon or a piano, isn't he short-sighted if he doesn't do his best to push the sale of these particular goods?

Why be satisfied with the profit alone if you can get a premium besides?

Your Cash Customers.

Many cash customers have no regular place of dealing. If they have a Forbes' Indexed Coupon Book paid for they will deal nowhere else while it lasts. They are pleased with the books, as it relieves them from the daily annoyances of handing out money for supplies, and many persons are glad to take a book and pay for it in advance, for this reason—you should give them the opportunity. Slices Everything from 6-pound Knuckles to half-ounce Ends.

No Fear of the Price Cutter

The retailer equipped with Johnson's "EVERSHARP" Slicer can smile serenely at his rivals' advertised bargains. They have no sting for him, they affect neither his trade or his profits.

As a bid for patronage: moist, soft cured beef, freshly cut in full-size wafer slices will draw more trade than any bargain your price-cutting rival can offer, and while the increased trade is permanent, it is more profitable ten times over than a line of price-cutting bargains.

No Risk of Competition

There is no other machine on the market can slice dried beef that can be sold in competition with these freshly-cut, pink-tinted, full-size wafer slices, transparently thin, smooth and glossy, handsome to look at, delicious to eat. Goods that sell as quick as shown and set the town to talking of their goodness.

Only one machine allowed in your town. You had better secure it while you can. Send for a sample of Johnson's sandwich-sliced beef, the beef that beats the world.

fore much alike in point of cleanliness and were just the same in price, twelve cents. However, our housekeeper was still being cheated out of two cents by trading at the dirty store, because there she had obtained American macaroni, which should sell at ten cents, at the higher price of the Italian brand. This wasn't a question of quality—many prefer the domestic brand prepared under our pure food laws—but it is a question of ethics.

Salmon at twelve cents a can at both stores showed practically the same difference in quality. There was half a cupful of waste, skin, bones and fat, in the can bought from the dirty store. The can delivered from the model store was solid, meaty and better flavored.

The difference between the two grades of prunes at twelve cents a pound was more marked. Those from the dirty store was obviously of an old vintage. They were shriveled, dusty and encrusted with bits of stick, stone and uncatalogued scraps of dirt. The rinse water from the first washing was indescribably dirty. They required three washings, and they did not "plump up" nicely in stewing. The prunes from the model store were not the finest sold in that establishment. They were offered as "seconds," but they were infinitely superior to the prunes described above. One washing sufficed; a few twigs, evidently of the prune tree, were dried in with the fruit, but there was neither dust nor stone. And by actual count there were four more of the better prunes to the pound than of the inferior.

At the dirty store, granulated sugar was sold at five and one-half cents a pound. At the better store it cost four and six-sevenths cents a pound.

The sweet pickles were priced the same at both stores, but one jar bore the label of a standard firm; the other bore no firm name at all, just a fancy label. The reason for this was obvious when we served the two grades of goods at the same meal. The pickles from the dirty store were soft and overseasoned. The pickles from the model store were firm and properly flavored.

The standard vanilla at ten cents a bottle was a third stronger than the vanilla in the nine-cent bottle—this by chemical test.

The difference between the lemons purchased at the two stores was a revelation. Those from the tidy store were firm, yet full of juice. Those from the dirty store, though apparently the same size, was either dry and hard or soft and pithy. The average lemon from the good store yielded two and one-half tablespoonfuls of juice; those from the cheap store produced less than a tablespoonful and a half, or a loss of seven tablespoonfuls of juice on half a dozen lemons.

Barring the ubiquitous milk pitcher, these figures prove that the housewife saved in cash, flavor and strength at least one-third by trading at the clean store.

It must be understood that these results were not obtained merely by careless shopping at the two stores, but through honest, practical household test of the articles purchased, backed by chemical analysis.

After it was all over, the old-fashioned housewife remarked that she had often wondered why she could not get the brands of corn starch, vanilla, cocoanut and chocolate used by her mother. She had actually begun to think that they were no longer on the market. She never dreamed that the untidy grocer, who had enjoyed her trade for three years, was foisting "seconds" or inferior makes of package and bottled articles upon her because his disorderly methods of doing business had forced him to squeeze an excessive profit out of each sale in order to support himself and maintain the business in which he was working industriously but unwisely.

It must not be said that all dirty grocers are unscrupulous. Many of them are either ignorant, lacking in judgment or easily influenced by the bland and specious arguments offered by unscrupulous jobbers and wholesalers. The man who does not display the intelligence and the good management essential to keeping a store clean generally lacks the intelligence and judgment to buy to advantage. Just as the slovenly housewife wastes the income placed at her disposal by a hard-working husband, so the grocer wastes his capital and stock by injudicious, unintelligent buying. He may not know that the package coffee which he sells at a few cents higher than his rival, the clean grocer, or the bulk coffee, in bean, ground or pulverized, is adulterated; but it is his business to know this.

The experience of the old-fashioned housewife, which forms the basis of this article, is one of many tests applied to the model and the dirty grocery, in city and in country, in small towns and villages in several States. As a matter of fact, prices for staple groceries seem to be about uniform all over the country. In Denver and in San Francisco prices were found to be a little higher than in New York, Boston, Washington, etc. When sugar was selling at less than five cents a pound in New York, Denverites were paying five and one-half. The most appreciable difference in prices in large and small cities or even villages was in butter and eggs. The village or small town housewife, near a farming community, has the advantage over the city housewife in these two commodities. But in some twenty cities and villages where staple groceries were purchased simultaneously during the preparation of this article, granulated sugar, loose crackers, bulk oatmeal, cheese, macaroni, prunes, bulk pickles, sardines, maple syrup in bottles, and laundry soap of a certain brand, sold practically at the same price. Therefore the experience of the housewife living near Philadelphia could probably be duplicated, even to prices in almost any city or town reached by the "Woman's Home Companion"

No part of the country has a monopoly of honest or dishonest grocers. In almost every town which has been investigated it has been possible to purchase clean, honest groceries. In some very small places there are still dirty grocery stores which have the trade at their mercy, but the introduction of groceries which are sold under well-known brands and at well-known prices has forced even the grocer with the monopoly to honest prices, or has made him an easy mark for honest competition on the part of rival stores, which sooner or later are bound to spring into existence. Where there used to be one store, there are now very often two, and in at least one of them you can buy good goods, cleanly handled and honestly marked. Accordingly, this problem is distinctly one for the housewife herself to solve. In the first place, know your grocer; be sure that his store is clean; if it is, it will follow, in nine cases out of ten, that his business throughout is systematically conducted, that he

How'd You Fare on Canned Goods?

Well, your futures are about all in—how did you make out?

On the things you didn't care much for you probably got 100 per cent. deliveries; but how about the things you wanted? Did you get 100 per cent on those?

We can tell you how to get 100 per cent, deliveries on all the canned goods you buy next year. Stipulate Blue Bell and Clover Farm goods with your jobber—not only because you get full deliveries, but because no better canned goods are packed in Maryland.

We make a 100 per cent. contract with the jobber—he can make it with you.

buys to advantage and on cash terms, that he handles his goods as economically as he does wholesomely, and that his prices to you for quality goods will stand the strictest comparison with his dirty, slovenly and almost necessarily dishonest rival. An honest grocer—and the country abounds in them—is a joy forever.

If there were room in this article there could be given in detail a hundred different experiments showing the cost of trading at the two kinds of stores, and the equally important comparisons in the quality, quantity and lasting power of the goods. Two or three instances must suffice.

A store whose untidy appearance is often overlooked because of its "sales," advertised a special in peas, two cans of A 1 peas for twenty-five cents. The labels on these cans were non-committal as to the name and fame of the canning agents—a point on which you cannot be too careful to make sure that you have the guarantee of a standard firm. At a tidy store a can of the same size prepared by a well-known house was bought at the standard price for that brand, fourteen cents, and the two cans were compared. The "bargain" peas smelled almost rancid when the can was opened, so the juice was poured off and the peas carefully rinsed. Then the cause of the strong flavor was discovered. The peas were of various sizes, a full dozen of very large, hard yellow peas were discovered. The peas from the clean store were subjected to the same rinsing process, and were found to be of uniform size, a trifle larger than the French pea.

As we have seen before, this disaster might have been avoided by a careful housewife if she had known just the brand of canned peas she wanted, and had insisted on getting that brand. This is the safest way to trade at any store. When you find that your grocer is honest enough to give you just the brand you ask for, and no other—when, in other words, you know your grocer—then, and then only, can you afford to try a brand from his store about which you know nothing. Perhaps you have found the exceptional grocer who has invented some canning process of his own, the superlative merit of which will some day win for his goods the fame which years of experience has awarded to the brand which you have always used and know you want. Perhaps, too, this is not so. At any rate, the grocer who, for the sake of a bigger profit, slips his own make of any prepared food in the place of a standard brand for which you have asked, is not honest enough to make his brand worthy of your patronage.

But how about the things which we prefer to buy in bulk? With these there is no hope except in the clean methods of your grocer. For instance, loose soda crackers at ten cents a pound, purchased at a clean grocery, proved crisp and palatable. The lid of the tin box holding the bulk crackers had been kept tightly closed. The same brand of crackers at the same price purchased at a slovenly looking store proved flat to the taste and moist to the touch.

Just one more example—butter. At a model store in October butter was purchased at thirty-two cents a pound—creamery tub butter of excellent flavor, sweet and palatable. Just around the corner, in one of a great chain of untidy groceries, hung a sign: "Special To-day, Best Creamery Tub Butter at 29 Cents a Pound. Done Up in Two-Pound Cartons. Only Two Cartons to a Customer."

Women were flocking to that sale and arguing volubly with the clerks for the privilege of buying just one more carton. Six pounds! Why, that will keep! A single carton was purchased and analyzed. It proved to be what is known as June butter, which had been kept in cold storage four months. In June butter is cheap, partly because milk is plentiful and partly because the cows turned into fresh pastures, eat so many strong weeds that even the butter is tainted with the flavor. Butter which had been bought to sell at twenty cents a pound had been marketed, after four months in cold storage, at twenty-nine cents, and in competition with absolutely fresh, untainted creamery butter at thirty-two cents a pound. Which is the real bargain for the fastidious housewife? And how many women who carried home the precious two-pound cartons, "only two to a customer," wound up by turning their bargains into the jar which holds the cooking butter, or, more likely still, handing it on to some Mary Miller, to whom cold-storage butter is far superior to no butter at all.

In the face of all these examples and after months of earnest investigation, "Woman's Home Companion" is convinced that not only can the economical housewife afford to trade with the clean grocer, but that she cannot afford to trade with any other. By withholding our trade from the dirty grocer, and giving it to the clean grocer, we have it in our power to make every grocer clean and honest—to eliminate the unsanitary grocery store, where dirt endangers the family health and substitution strikes at the family purse.

Federal Food Board Backs Down on French Labels.

What promised to develop into a test suit between importers of food products of this city and the United States Government over the legality of one of the pure food regulations was unexpectedly halted last week by an unconditional surrender on the part of the Department of Agriculture. The regulation in question is that requiring the labels on imported food and drug products to be printed in the English language, a rule which in the past few months has given the Board of Food and Drug Inspection an immense amount of trouble, has caused great congestion at the public stores and consequent inconvenience to the importers, and has given rise to the charge that the pure food law is being used as an instrument for "pure labels" rather than for pure food. The surrender of the Food Bureau came in the form of a notification to Dr. Doolittle, the local chemist of the Department of Agriculture, that the Board had recommended to the Secretaries of the three departments charged with the enforcement of the law that Regulation 17 be amended so as to read that labels "should be" instead of "shall be" printed in English. "This means," said Dr. Doolittle, "that while the department believes that importers have already seen the advantage of labeling their products in English, it will be beyond our power to compel such labeling. In the meantime orders have been issued cancelling the orders of detention against the importations which have been held up for non-compliance with this regulation."

AMONG THE TRADE.

Creditors filed a petition in the United States District Court on Monday to have William K. Cassell, Norristown, Pa., declared an involuntary bankrupt. The names of the petitioners and the amounts claimed are: P. W. Kiefaber & Co., $494.50; N. K. Fairbanks, $16.25; Granville L. Detwieler, $20.88.

The Great Western Cereal Co. advanced the price of Friends' and Mothers' oats 20 cents per case during the week. The Quaker Oats Co. also advanced Quaker oats the same amount. This brings the advertised brands of rolled oats about on a parity with the present price of bulk oats. A further advance of 5 cents per case will occur January 1st.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

Fruit Cake Window.

Every grocer at this season of the year should have a fruit cake display. That is, use all things usually put in a fruit cake. As shown in illustration to the rear of window, have 1-pound packages of seeded raisins, seedless raisins and currants. To front of this have 10 or 12-pound boxes of figs and dates in bulk, also 1-pound packages of figs and dates.

To the front of window have a 10-pound box of orange peel, lemon peel and citron. Between these boxes have a heap of English walnuts and one of cream nuts.

Then have some appropriate sign as, "Don't put off baking your fruit cake," or "We supply you with fresh fruit to bake your fruit cake."

HARRY H. MATTER.

Williamstown, Pa.

Corn Meal Display.

We here submit a picture of a very simple and yet neat and attractive window display of corn meal.

We used one large shock of corn; the same was stood up at side and end. In the centre of window we had a Rollman food chopper, the hopper being filled with whole corn. Then we had a small pile of corn meal at bottom of chopper. On the same box that chopper was fastened, a peck measure filled with shelled corn and two corn choppers. The bottom of window was then filled with bags of corn meal and ears of corn, with corn meal spread between the bags, where the ears of corn lay. The window not only created widespread attention, but increased our sales on the corn meal.

Question: James Cassone, Allentown, Pa.—Years ago I bought a grocery store from my wife, which store I enlarged and am running in my own name. But a few days ago I found out that some commercial agencies report that the business is owned by me and my wife.

I desire to have these agencies report it correct, and would be very obliged if you will suggest me in your "Legal Department" what I shall do and where I must direct my inquirer.

Answer.—Serve notice on the agencies which are doing this, either yourself or through an attorney, that you are the sole owner of the business and that their statement that it is owned jointly by yourself and wife is incorrect. If after this notice they still persist in their error, the courts will compel them to make the change upon your application.

Lots of Canned Meat Condemned in Indiana.

The Indiana Food Commissioner reports that in the month of October considerable quantities of foodstuffs were condemned. Included in the list of articles that were withdrawn from sale and destroyed were 170 pounds of meat in bulk, and 82[illegible] cans or packages of tinned meats. Six hundred and ninety bottles of extracts, 200 pounds of tomato pulp, 29 quarts of maple syrup, 77 bottles of catsup, 44 jars of jellies and jams, etc. These goods were condemned because they were all palpably misbranded. In most instances the articles were old stock.

S. B. Goff & Sons Co., of Camden, N. J., are offering a 25-cent bottle of their cough syrup free to any dealer sending for it. They have a special offer that will interest you; better write to-day. You get in good company when you stock Goff's remedies, as more than 14,000 grocers are handling them.

FOR RENT.

FOR RENT—Large General Store (owned by the undersigned estate) in Quarryville, Lancaster County. Pa. This Borough has a population of about 800. Is the terminus of two steam railroads, a trolley line and two new state turnpikes. It is the only town of any considerable size in the ten lower townships of Lancaster County, and commands a large proportion of their patronage. It has two banks, and does more business in a week than most towns of its size in a month. In fact, during the year of 1907, it is carefully estimated to have exceeded $800,000, not including the money paid out in the borough for tobacco which will amount to about $150,000 yearly. The borough has, besides this store, one large general store, carrying every line, and one smaller general store, one small grocery and a large hardware store. This store has enjoyed a large patronage for half a century. The location is the best in the borough, and in the midst of the town's business activity, within 200 feet of the depot of the Lancaster & Quarryville Railroad, the Lancaster, Oxford & Southern Railroad, the freight station and the terminus of the trolley line. The building is large, well-lighted, and is undergoing repairs; it has a fine cellar. It will be rented on good terms. The opportunity for an energetic man to establish a fine business in one of the best towns of its size is here afforded. A renter will not be handicapped with a stock of old goods, as the building is entirely empty and ready for immediate occupancy. For any further information address George W. Hensel's Estate, Quarryville, Lancaster Co., Pa. tf

Bought Simply. Because She Liked the Glass Package

It's odd what little things make sales sometimes. A grocer told us the other day that the day before a woman had bought a jar of Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa simply because she liked the novelty of the glass package. She didn't ask any questions about the peculiar characteristics of the cocoa; she liked the glass jar and bought.

There is a point in that for grocers who study the public—the useful novelty is usually the seller.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa, the only cocoa packed in glass, has a smoother flavor than any other cocoa made. That is because our exclusive process of making takes out certain substances that other manufacturers leave in.

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

40 cents a pound

Packed in ½-lb. jars, 6 and 12-lb. boxes

BELL'S SEASONING

40 Years the original Favorite: for delicately flavoring Dressings for Turkey, Chicken, Game, Fish, Lamb, Croquettes, Oyster Patties, Escallops, etc.

JELLIED MEATS OR FOWL.—One pint of cold meat or fowl. 1 teaspoon Bell's Seasoning, ½ teaspoon salt, liquid enough to fill pint mould. Add to liquid, when hot, 1 tablespoon granulated gelatine. Cool, and serve on a base of lettuce leaves over which thin sliced lemon is placed.

The above advertisement (one of those we are using in our advertising to the general public) has not improbably caught the eyes of your customers and made them wonder where they could get BELL'S SEASONING.

You don't need to advertise BELL'S SEASONING—simply let your trade know you keep it, and our advertising will do the rest.

Your Store Should Be Brighter Than Day

Your store ought to be lighter at night than in the day because at night the light is all inside, in daytime it is all outside.

Is it?

A store that at night is only "as light as day" would probably show up rather darkly. Stores that are brilliant and cheery are literally brighter than day.

A few electric lights properly disposed, will make your store inviting and attractive—the lack of them will make a cold and gloomy place that repels everybody.

Take it up with us.

Be Proud of Your Olive Oil

You may remember the recent tests which the United States Government made into all brands of imported olive oil.

Those tests (Government Bulletin 77, page 55) proved Nicelle Olive Oil to be superior to all the other brands tested. Nicelle Oil is made and bottled in Nice, France. It is the highest type of pure olive oil producible.

Sell olive oil you can be proud of. There are so many brands you can't.

The Ramly Cigarette is the finest 10c. Turkish cigarette ever made. It is so good other manufacturers try to make their goods look like the Ramly, but there the similarity ends.

If you want to get a run on cigarettes, get people to go out of their way to come to you, put in the Ramly. Remember how it is spelled—R-A-M-L-Y.

To Display Fruit

The T. & S. Fruit-Display Tree is by far the best thing on the market for showing of fruit and making it sell itself. Solid oak or cherry, revolving top, ball-bearing casters; stands 6 feet 4 inches high.

Dealers have told us this fixture sold 25 to 50 per cent. more bananas for them.

"Picked this Morning"

You know how it appeals to your customers to tell them that your fruit and vegetables were "picked this morning." You can tell them the same thing about your canned goods if you give them the OLNEY Brand, for they are grown, prepared and packed in the country—gathered in the morning and sealed in tins before night.

If you do not know us let us get acquainted, it will be to your interest and the satisfaction of your trade.

What Rennet Must Do to Be Good

Good rennet has gotten to be one of the most staple dessert specialties that a grocer can sell.

If it is good. To be good, it must coagulate milk in a few minutes and it must not spoil. James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet fills these requirements under a double-barreled guarantee. And besides that, it has the flavor—the clean, delicate, penetrating flavor that makes rennet-eating grow into a habit.

As to profit, $3.00 return on a $1.50 investment is good enough, eh?

The Tender Kernels of Fancy Corn

THE CORN WITHOUT HULLS

The Pressing & Orr Company
Norwalk, O.

This introduces to you our WINORR Brand of Canned Corn. In one vital respect it is wholly different from every other brand on the market.

The difference is in the fact that WINORR Corn has no hulls. We use in our canning a device that extracts the meat of the corn, and throws out the tough hulls. Result—a dream of tender corn kernels that your customers will go wild over.

A novelty like this gives a lot of help in selling a new thing.

We also pack canned Sauer Kraut, dry Mince Meat in cartons, and a Salad Dressing which is quite the fanciest thing on the market.

We Are Advertising This Trade-Mark

This trade-mark means to Jams and Marmalades what "Sterling" means to silver; the best that can be made; sound fruit and sugar; absolutely pure. Better get acquainted with it.

Assorted case, 2 doz. 1-lb. jars, $4.50.

MARMALADES—Orange and Grapefruit

JAMS—Fig, Peach, Grape, Strawberry and Blackberry

Have You Said This?

"You couldn't hire me to sell Ariosa Coffee because I can sell my own package coffee!"

But look what the sale of your own package coffee loses for you. It loses the advantage of the advertising we are doing to your customers, all of which helps actively to sell Ariosa. It loses the selling force of the fact that every man, woman and child in your town has heard of Ariosa and knows what it is.

And it loses the vouchers that come to you with Ariosa; vouchers, that if you will work hand in hand with us, will bring you several hundred dollars of merchandise every year gratuitously.

Ham Confidence

There is a vast difference between merely "ham" and Swift's PREMIUM Ham.

The grocer who just keeps "ham," who buys no special brand, and buys from no particular packer, is just as certain to have a small and irregular ham trade as night is certain to follow day.

But the grocer who sells only Swift's PREMIUM ham, which is always the same and always fine, will have a ham trade that amounts to something. His trade won't care to experiment with other grocers; they're getting what they want and they're getting it all the time.

PREMIUM Hams are tender, delicious and—this is important—well advertised.

Better Can't Be Made

Many grocers who in the past would have handled independent starch were prevented by the fact that there was no good independent starch.

Not so now. No better starches have ever been made or can be made than Murdoch's Laundry and Corn Starch. We take the most extraordinary care with every detail of their manufacture. Things like washing seven times to get the gluten out and make them white.

WALKER STORE FIXTURES

—Attract Good Trade—

There is so much to be said to the merchant about to buy new fixtures that we prefer to send our catalogue, which will set him wise on many points that he should know. Our designs and our workmanship are unsurpassed. Our customers write that they are more than pleased with the appearance of their stores.

WE KNOW HOW TO DESIGN ARTISTIC INTERIORS

We are ready at all times to offer suggestions covering any detail. And our catalogue is sufficiently explicit to make it both interesting and instructive. Send for it.

Don't Buy a Cheap Wagon

If you do, you'll remember this advice. A cheap wagon looks nearly as well in the factory as our "J. M.," but oh, what a difference in six months!

The "J. M." wagon is the best delivery wagon made. Only the finest materials go into it, and they're put together right, too.

If we haven't what you want, though we probably have, we'll build it for you.

If 1000 Retailers in Philadelphia Recommended Us, Would YOU Believe in Us?

One of the hardest propositions which confront the retailer is to turn their bad debts into cash. Lots of them have tried different collection agencies, paid retaining or subscription fees and got no results; so it is hard to convince them that any one can help to bring the beats to book.

We show you how to collect your own accounts; nobody handles your money but you. We can give you the names of a thousand merchants in Philadelphia whom we have shown how to get money due them which had been charged off long before they heard of us.

It costs you nothing to find out what our plan is—can you afford not to?

We Collect Bad Accounts

We not only say we collect bad debts; but we do it! You all have them, and you all have tried everything in your power to collect them and have failed. We may also fail; but it is not likely that your dead beats will stand the pressure we put on them, as we have found only a few that can resist our persuasion. We will be glad to tell you more about our plan and ourselves.
